MEANING OF TERMS

USED IN CLASSIFYING ANNOTATING CASES.

THE different expressions used to describe the effect of the annotating cases have the following meanings, and the classification of the annotating cases has been done strictly in accordance with these meanings. The annotating cases are listed chronologically except such as are classified as "Referred to" or "Mentioned." These come at the end and are arranged inter se in chronological order. The terms used in classifying the annotating cases are as follows:—

- "APPLIED" (Apld.).—This expression is used to denote the fact that the principle of law enunciated in the annotated case has been applied to a new set of facts and circumstances in the annotating case.
- "APPROVED" (Apprvd.).—This expression is used to denote the fact that the annotated case has been considered to be good law in the annotating case where the latter is in a higher court than the former.
- "CONSIDERED" (Consd.).—This expression is used where the remarks in the annotating case are devoid of adverse criticism and merely denote the giving of more or less careful consideration to the annotated case.
- "DISTINGUISHED" (Distd.).—This expression is used where the earlier case is not necessarily doubted, but where some essential difference (either on the facts or in law) between it and the annotated case is pointed out.
- "DOUBTED" (Dbtd.).—This expression is used where the court in the annotating case, without definitely going to the length of saying that the annotated case is wrong, adduces reasons which seem to show that it is not accurate.
- "EXPLAINED" (Expld.).—This expression is used where the earlier case is not necessarily doubted, but the decision arrived at is justified or accounted for by calling attention to some point of fact or of law which is usually, but not necessarily, one not obvious on the face of the report.
- "EXTENDED" (Extd.).—Compare "APPLIED," supra.
- "FOLLOWED" (Folld.).—This expression is used to denote that the same principles of law are applied in the two cases. It does not necessarily imply that the facts are substantially identical in the two cases.
- "NOT FOLLOWED" (N.F.).—Compare "FOLLOWED," supra, to which it is the adverse.
- "OVERRULED" (Overd.).—This expression is used where the annotating case is on substantially identical facts with the annotated case and in a higher court and the rule in the latter case is held to be wrong.
- "REFERRED" (Refd.).—This expression is used only where the annotating case deals with the point of the Digest paragraph and is without comment of any definite character on the case annotated, and where there is no delicate shade of approval or disapproval which would justify the use of any of the foregoing words.
- "MENTIONED" (Mentd.).—This expression is used only where none of the foregoing terms apply. In other words, it is used only where the case annotated is cited on a point having nothing to do with the point in the Digest paragraph.

SECT. 3.—TERMINATION OF TENANCY.

SUB-SECT. 1.—AT WHAT DATE TENANCY MAY BE DETERMINED.

A. In General.

1. Taking from Old Lady Day — Entry to arable at Candlemas.]—A custom that on a taking from Old Lady Day, Apr. 5, the tenant should enter on the arable at Candlemas to prepare for the Lent corn:—Held: not an objection to the validity of a notice to quit ending at Old Lady Day.—DOE d. DAGGET v. SNOWDEN (1775), 2 Wm. Bl. 1224; 96 E. R. 720.

Annotations:—Consd. Doe d. Allen v. Calvert (1802), 2 East, 376. Folld. Doe d. Strickland v. Spence (1805), 6 East, 120. Refd. Rutland v. Wythe (1842-43), 10 Cl. & Fin. 419, H. L.

2. Custom that tenancy for three years — Unreasonable.]—Held: a custom that, if a tenant took a farm in which there was any open field land for an uncertain term, the holding of the whole was to be considered as a holding from three years to three years, the duration of the local course of husbandry, was unreasonable.—ROE d. BREE v. LEES (1777), 2 Wm. Bl. 1171; 96 E. R. 691.

3. Holding under void agreement — Terms as to quitting determine.]—If a landlord lease a farm for seven years by parol, & agree that the tenant shall enter at Lady Day & quit at Candlemas, though the lease be void by Stat. Frauds as to the duration of the term, the tenant holds under the terms of the lease in other respects, & the landlord can only put an end to the tenancy at Candlemas.—DOE d. RIGGE v. BELL (1793), 5 Term Rep. 471; 101 E. R. 265.

Annotations:—Distd. Doe d. Warner v. Browne (1807), 8 East, 165. Refd. Doe d. Rogers v. Pullen (1836), 3 Scott, 271; Beale v. Saunders (1837), 3 Hodg. 147; Cattley v. 4. Feast of St. Michael — Old or new style — Admissibility of evidence.]—A lease of lands by deed, since the new style, to hold from the feast of St. Michael, must be taken to mean from New Michaelmas, & cannot be shown by extrinsic evidence to refer to a holding from Old Michaelmas; & a notice to quit at Old Michaelmas, though given half a year before New Michaelmas, is bad.—DOE d. SPICER v. LEA (1809), 11 East, 312; 103 E. R. 1024.

B. 378, C. A.

5. Until Michaelmas next & no longer — With use of part till Lady Day.]—Upon a demise “until Michaelmas next & no longer,” with the privilege of using part of the premises for specific purposes till Lady Day following, ejectment may be brought for those parts to which the privilege does not extend, in the interval between Michaelmas & Lady Day. Such an agreement containing an express provision for giving up the farm at Michaelmas, the lessor with the assent of the lessee adds the words “house & buildings”:—Semble: this alteration, being merely an expression of what was before implied, does not require a new stamp.—DOE d. WATERS v. HOUGHTON (1827), 1 Man. & Ry. K. 208; 6 L. J. O. S. K. B. 86.

6. Stipulations not excluding right to terminate.]—Premises were demised under a written agreement, dated Aug. 4, 1845, “the tenancy to be from year to year from Michaelmas next,” at the rent of £55 payable half-yearly “except the last half-year, which portion of rent shall be paid on or before Aug. 1, in that year, & to be deemed then due for all legal remedies for recovering rent in arrears”; the tenant “to allow the landlord, or incoming tenant, in the last year, to enter on May 1 to make fallows, & carry out the manure,” for which compensation was to be paid, etc.; the tenant to have “the use of the barns for stacking & threshing the crops of the last year till May 1 after the tenancy”:—Held: these stipulations did not necessarily import that the tenancy was to be extended beyond the first year, & the tenancy was determined by a notice dated Mar. 24, 1846, to quit at Michaelmas that year.—DOE d. PLUMER v. MAINBY (1847), 10 Q. B. 473; 16 L. J. Q. B. 303; 11 Jur. 308; 116 E. R. 180.

7. Custom to show when tenancy determines.]—The custom of the country is not admissible to prove that a notice to quit, served on Apr. 5, is a good notice to quit, by reason of the tenancy being a Michaelmas tenancy, but it must be proved by direct evidence that such is the case.—HOGG v. NORRIS & BERRINGTON (1860), 2 F. & F. 246.

8. Possession under agreement for lease — No rent paid—Tenancy at will.]—Pltf. entered into possession of a farm under an agreement for a lease for twenty-one years from deft. Before any rent was due or had been paid deft. gave pltf. notice to quit, & turned him out of possession, because he had done that which amounted to a breach of a covenant contained in the agreement & intended to be inserted in the lease. The tenant brought an action for trespass:—Held: (1) pltf. not entitled to recover; (2) as he was in possession under an agreement for a lease for twenty-one years & had paid no rent, he was only a tenant at will, & his landlord was entitled so to determine that tenancy, which was not subject to or controlled by Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 14.—COATSWORTH v. JOHNSON (1886), 55 L. J. Q. B. 220; 54 L. T. 520; 2 T. L. R. 351, C. A.

Annotation:—Refd. Swain v. Ayres (1888), 21 Q. B. D. 289, C. A.

B. Different Parts entered at different Times—What is substantial Entry.

9. Question for jury.]—Where house & land are let together to be entered upon at different times, & it does not appear from the terms of the

PART II. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 1.—B.

d. Grass at Whit-Sunday — Arable land at separation of crop.]—Under an improving lease, the terms of removal in which were Whit-Sunday as to the grass, and the separation of the crop as to the arable land:—Held: (1) the tenant was not bound to remove at a. Tenant removing from arable lands at Michaelmas.]—A tenant removing from arable lands at Michaelmas is not entitled to retain possession of the barns or stables after that term.—ANDERSON v. TOD (1809), Hume, 842.—SCOT.

PART II. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 1.—A.

b. Entry at Whit-Sunday—Rent paid annually at Martinmas.]—A tenant under a lease for seven years from Whit-Sunday, 1855, of land occupied as grass parks, paid the rent annually at Martinmas:—Held: the landlord was not entitled to remove the tenant from the lands at Martinmas, 1861, in order to prepare the land by tillage for the next year's crop.—ADDIE v. YOUNG (1862), 24 D. 799.—SCOT.

c. Lease from Whit-Sunday—First grain crop specified.]—A farm was let for nineteen years from Whit-Sunday, 1850, the crop of 1850 being declared to be the first grain crop:—Held: the ten-demise from what time the whole is to be taken as let together, it is a question of fact for the jury, which is the principal & which the accessory subject of demise, in order for the judge to decide whether the notice to quit the whole is given in time.—DOE d. HEAPY v. HOWARD (1809), 11 East, 498 ; 103 E. R. 1096.

Annotation :—Refd. Doe d. Kindersley v. Hughes (1840), 7 M. & W. 139.

10. Primâ facie entry to land — Not to houses.]—A farm was held by a tenant from year to year, as to the lands from Feb. 2, & as to the house & buildings from May 1. On Feb. 16, 1838, the tenant received a notice to quit “at the end of your present year’s holding.” On the trial of an ejectment to recover possession of the farm, no evidence was given by the tenant that the house & buildings & not the land were the principal subject of demise. The judge who tried the cause treated the land as the principal & the house & buildings as the accessory, & he was not required by defts. to leave that question to the jury :—Held : (1) the notice was sufficient to put an end to the tenancy in 1839 ; (2) the primâ facie presumption in the case of a farm was that the land was the principal & the buildings the accessory.—DOE d. KINDERSLEY v. HUGHES (1840), 7 M. & W. 139 ; H. & W. 147 ; 10 L. J. Ex. 185 ; 151 E. R. 711.

Annotation :—Mentd. Belaney v. Kelly (1871), 24 L. T. 738.

11. Day of payment of rent.]—Semble* : the day of payment of the rent may always be considered as the substantial time of entry.—DOE d. STRICKLAND v. SPENCE (1805), 6 East, 120 ; 2 Smith, K. B. 255 ; 102 E. R. 1232.

Annotations :—Mentd. Doe d. Bradford v. Watkins (1806), 7 East, 551 ; Sidebotham v. Holland, [1895] 1 Q. B. 378, C. A.

12. Pasture at Old Lady Day — Meadow at Old May Day.]—An agreement to take a farm, the arable from Old Candlemas, the pasture from Old Lady Day, & the meadow from Old May Day, paying rent half-yearly at Old Michaelmas & Lady Day, is substantially a taking of the whole from Old Lady Day ; & notice to quit & deliver before Old Michaelmas is sufficient to determine the tenancy.—DOE d. DAGGET v. SNOWDEN (1775), 2 Wm. Bl. 1224 ; 96 E. R. 720.

Annotations :—Consd. Doe d. Allen v. Calvert (1802), 2 East, 376. Folld. Doe d. Strickland v. Spence (1805), 6 East, 120. Refd. Rutland v. Wythe (1842-43), 10 Cl. & Fin. 419, H. L.

13. Arable land at Candlemas — Buildings & pastures at May Day.]—In an action of ejectment by a landlord of a farm, it was shown that deft. held the farm as to the arable lands from Candlemas, & as to the buildings & pastures from May Day, & that the rent was payable at Michaelmas & Lady Day. The notice to quit was given six months before May Day, but not six months before Candlemas :—Held : plff. could not recover, since the notice must be given half a year before Candlemas.—DOE d. WILTON v. — (1788), cited in DOE d. ALLEN v. CALVERT (1802), 2 East, 376 ; 102 E. R. 413.

Annotation :—Consd. Doe d. Allen v. Calvert (1802), 2 East,

14. Housing at Old Lady Day — Land at Candlemas.]—On a lease from year to year of a farm, the tenant was to enter on the housing at Old Lady Day,

Whit-Sunday from arable land which had been natural pasture at the commencement of the lease, but brought in by him in the course of it ; (2) the tenant was bound at that time to remove from all grass, whether growing on arable or pasture land ; (3) “grass” did not include the penult crop & yielding the first crop in the year of removal.—

*e. Entry at Whit-Sunday—Presumption arising from.]—*There is no presumption that a Whit-Sunday entry means an entry to the houses, grass, & fallow at Whit-Sunday, & to the arable land under crop at Martinmas, or at the separation of the crop from the ground

& the land at Old Candlemas, etc., with an agreement to quit at the times of entering, the rent being payable at Old Lady Day & Michaelmas :—Held : a notice to quit half a year before Old Lady Day, which was the substantial entry on the farm, was good, the entry on the land at Old Candlemas Day being only in the nature of a liberty.—DOE d. STRICKLAND v. SPENCE (1805), 6 East, 120 ; 2 Smith, K. B. 255 ; 102 E. R. 1232.

Annotations :—Folld. Doe d. Bradford v. Watkins (1806), 7 East, 551 ; Refd. Sidebotham v. Holland, [1895] 1 Q. B. 378, C. A.

15. Meadow on December 25 — Pasture on March 25—Housing, mills, etc., on May 1—Manufacturing premises.]—Under an agreement of demise, dated in Jan., of a dwelling-house & other buildings for the purpose of carrying on a manufacture, together with certain meadow, pasture, & bleaching grounds, water-courses, etc., for a term of thirty-five years, the tenancy was to commence as to the meadow ground, from Dec. 25 preceding, as to the pasture, from Mar. 25 following, & as to the housing, mills, & all the rest of the premises, from May 1, reserving the first half-year’s rent on the Day of Pentecost, & the other half-year’s rent at Martinmas :—Held : (1) the substantial subject of demise being the house & buildings for the purpose of the manufacture, May 1 was the substantial time of entry to which a notice to quit ought to refer, & not Dec. 25, when the incoming tenant had liberty of entering on the meadow, which was merely auxiliary to the other & principal subject of demise : (2) a notice to quit served on Sept. 28 (which would have been sufficient with reference even to Mar. 25, the day of entry on the pasture ground, Sept. 29 being the corresponding half-yearly day of holding to Mar. 25) to quit at expiration of the current year of holding, was sufficient.—DOE d. BRADFORD v. WATKINS (1806), 7 East, 551 ; 3 Smith, K. B. 517 ; 103 E. R. 213.

Annotation :—Refd. Rutland v. Wythe (1842-43), 10 Cl. & Fin. 419, H. L.

16. Lands on February 2 — House on May 1.]—Qu.* : whether, where a tenant holds a farm from year to year, the lands from Feb. 2, & the house from May 1, a notice to quit the whole, given half a year before Feb. 2, is sufficient to entitle the landlord to recover the whole in ejectment, on a demise dated Feb. 3.—DOE d. DAVENPORT v. RHODES (1843), 11 M. & W. 600 ; 12 L. J. Ex. 382 ; 1 L. T. O. S. 289 ; 152 E. R. 945.

17. House & grass at Whit-Sunday—Arable land at separation of crop.]—A lease was declared to commence “as to the houses & grass at Whit-Sunday, & as to the arable land at the separation of the crop from the ground.” It was to last for nineteen years, perpetually renewable on requisition, to be made twelve months before its expiration :—Held : (1) the expiration of the lease was at Whit-Sunday, 1861, & the requisition for renewal ought to have been made at or before Whit-Sunday, 1860 : (2) a requisition postponed till Aug. 1, 1860 (though before “the separation of the crop from the ground”), was too late.

The lease, if its expiration were at the separation of the crops, would not have a certain & definite termination, but separate endings, as to different & in the case of the subjects let being in the natural possession of the proprietor.

Under missives of lease, with entry at Whit-Sunday :—Held : entry had been given as well to the arable land as to the houses, grass, & fallow at that term, the whole being at the time in the possession of the proprietor.—DUFF v. WILSON (1864), 3 M. 173.—SCOT unknown portions of the arable lands at different & uncertain periods; & consequently there would be no possibility of computing either the beginning or the ending of the last year, & no certainty as to the day when the notice of renewal ought to be given, or when it would expire (LORD WESTBURY, C.).

It appears to me that the term of nineteen years expired at Whit-Sunday, 1861, that the period between Whit-Sunday & the separation of the crop from the ground was not a continuance of the term, but only a continuance of the possession (LORD CHELMSFORD).—WIGHT v. HOPETOUN (EARL) (1864), 4 Macq. 729, H. L.

18. Notice to quit Lady Day — Good for Old or New Lady Day.]—A notice to quit on Lady Day is a good termination of a holding, either from Lady Day old or Lady Day new style.—DENN d. WILLAN v. WALKER (1800). Peake, Add. Cas. 194.

19. Notice to quit part—Bad at common law—Good under particular agreement.]—A farm was leased for twenty-one years, at a rent of £180 per annum, consisting, as described in the lease, of the Town Barton, & its several parcels described by name, at the rent of £83, other closes named at other rents of £5, £5, & £1, the Shippen Barton, & its several parcels described by name, at £86, with a power reserved to either party to determine the lease at the end of fourteen years, on giving two years' previous notice :—Held : (1) a notice by the landlord to his tenant to quit "Town Barton, etc., agreeably to the terms of the covenant between us on expiration of the 14th year of your term," given in due time, was sufficient; (2) a notice to quit a part only of premises leased together is bad at common law.—DOE d. RODD v. ARCHER (1811), 14 East, 245; 104 E. R. 595.

Annotation :—Dist. Giddins v. Dodd (1856), 20 J. P. 580.

20. Mistake in description of lands — Lessee not misled.]—In ejectment to recover a farm at H. the notice to quit described the premises to be at D., which was a distinct parish, but as it did not appear that deft. was misled by the notice :—Held : it was sufficient.—DOE d. ARMSTRONG v. WILKINSON (1840), 12 Ad. & El. 743; Arn. & H. 39; 4 Per. & Dav. 323; 5 J. P. 45; 113 E. R. 995.

21. Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883 — Notice by registered letter.]—Held : a year's notice to quit a holding, to which A. H. Act, 1883, applied, made necessary & sufficient by virtue of s. 33 of that Act, was a notice under the Act within s. 28 of the Act, & might be served upon the person to whom it was to be given by being sent through the post in a registered letter addressed to him at his last known place of abode in England.—VAN GRUTTEN v. TREVENEN, [1902] 2 K. B. 82; 71 L. J. K. B. 544; 87 L. T. 344; 50 W. R. 516; 18 T. L. R. 575; 46 Sol. Jo. 482, C. A.

B. Length of Notice required.

22. Agricultural Holdings Act, 1875 — Notice given before commencement of Act.]—A landlord on Feb. 3 gave notice to quit to his tenant, who held under him as a tenant from year to year, & on Feb. 13 the above Act came into operation :—Held : by virtue of the notice to quit so given on Feb. 3 there was no contract of tenancy from year to year current at the commencement of the Act.—VANSITTART v. ALLEN (1877), 41 J. P. 441.

23. — Agreement for "six months' notice."]—Where premises were demised by deed at a yearly rent for "the term of one year, & so on from year to year, determinable at the end of the first or any subsequent year on six months' notice to quit," & six months' notice was given by the lessor to the lessee :—Held : such notice was sufficient to determine the tenancy, since s. 51 of the above Act was not applicable to a case where the parties had expressly

i. Notice by letter.]—W. was tenant from year to year to L. of certain lands. L.'s agent wrote a letter to W. as follows : "Sir, I have just been looking over your farm, & I find you have not complied with the terms of your agreement, viz., to lay out £300 in permanent improvements and buildings, within two years, from May 1, 1852, to May 1, 1854. I therefore, on the part of Mr. L., beg to say he does not now consider himself in any way bound to you, & will require possession of his farm on May 1 next." Subsequently pltf. attempted to serve W. regularly, but service was not effected, owing to a mistake of the process-server :—Held : the letter was a sufficient notice to quit.—LANGLEY v. WILLIAMS (1856), 28 L. T. O. S. 24.—IR.

g. Tenant of two farms with onstead on each—Warning served on one sufficient.]—S. granted a lease of lands at W. to K., who resided at another farm called L., & who was so described in the lease from S. Warning was given at W. :—Held : (1) the Act of 1555 meant the warning to be served at the onstead or dwelling-house on the lands, & a tenant who had two farms, with an onstead on each, had two dwelling-houses; (2) the warning was properly given.—STEWART v. KERR (1805), Hume, 571.—SCOT.

PART II. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 2.—B.

h. Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1908 (c. 64)—"Land for b or other purposes" —(Grazing purposes.)—A landlord let a park for one year, & in the lease reserved "power to resume, in whole or in part, the lands hereby let for any purpose whatever, except that of letting to another agricultural tenant, on giving one month's notice of his intention so to do to the tenant." The landlord gave the tenant one month's notice of his intention to resume possession of the park, the purpose being to graze pedigree sheep belonging to himself :—Held : (1) the enumerated purposes in s. 18 (5) of the above Act did not form a genus; (2) the resumption contemplated was covered by the words "other purposes," & the notice was sufficient.—CRICHTON STUART (LORD) v. OGILVIE, [1914] S. C. 888; 51 Sc. L. R. 761; 2 S. L. T. 116.—SCOT.

i. Farm let from year to year—Circumstances not amounting to warning.]—A landlord & tenant could not agree to a renewal of the lease of a farm, & the landlord subsequently publicly advertised the farm in the newspapers, & granted a lease to a third party. In an action of removing brought by the landlord :—Held : no sufficient regular warning had been given to the tenant, & the tenant was entitled to possess the lands for another year by tacit relocation.—GORDON v. BRYDEN (1803), 13 F. C. 164.—SCOT.

j. Grass parks let for pasture—Tenancy from year to year—No formal notice necessary.]—Where grass parks are let for pasture from year to year, the doctrine of tacit relocation does not take effect, & no legal formal warning to remove is necessary.

Deft. insisted on his rights to two parks, refusing peaceable possession to the new tenant, on the ground that he had received no legal warning & was entitled to the use of the pasture land for another year by tacit relocation :—Held : (1) unless he made a new bargain, he was not entitled to remain a single day after the expiry of his term; (2) if he did, he could be summarily removed, because he had no title of possession whatever.—MACHARG (PETITIONER) (1805), 13 F. C. 464.—SCOT.

k. Contract for share farming—No provision as to duration—Reasonable notice.]—Deft., the owner of a farm, entered into an agreement with pltf. to work it on shares as a dairy farm, deft. to find the land, stock & plant, & pltf. to find all labour, & rent to be paid jointly out of the proceeds & the remaining profits to be divided. There was no provision as to the duration of the contract. After pltf. had been in occupation for two months deft. terminated the contract, & gave pltf. nine days' notice to quit the land, & after the expiration of the nine days forcibly ejected him :—Held : (1) the contract was one which could only be terminated by reasonable notice; (2) pltf. was in occupation under a licence which was coupled with such an interest as rendered it irrevocable.—BELLINGER v. HUGHES (1911), 11 S. R. N. S. W. 419.—AUS.

24. Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883 — Agreement for "six months' notice."—A tenancy under a written agreement from year to year "until six months' notice shall have been given . . . in the usual way to determine the tenancy" is not one "where a half-year's notice . . . is by law necessary" within s. 33 of the above Act, which does not apply so as to render a year's notice necessary for determination of the tenancy.—*BARLOW v. 25. Common field lands — Tenancy from year to year—Six months' notice.—A general parol demise at an annual rent, where the bulk of the farm is inclosed, & a small part in the open common fields, is only a lease from year to year, not for so long as the usual round of husbandry extends, & the usual half-year's notice to quit is sufficient.—ROE d. BREE v. LEES (1777), 2 Wm. Bl. 1171; 96 E. R. 691.

26. — Custom of twelve months' notice—Evidence.—In ejectment for common field lands by a landlord against his tenant, deft. alleged a custom to give a year's notice. Pltf. had given six months' notice:—Held: under a special custom twelve months' notice might be necessary, but there ought to be very strong evidence of the custom.—ROE d. HENDERSON v. CHARNOCK (1790), 1 Peake, 6.

27. Two years' notice agreed on—Formal lease never executed.—An agreement for a lease of a farm contained a stipulation that the tenancy should continue until after two years' notice to quit had been given. The tenant occupied the farm, paid rent for some years, but no lease was executed:—Held: it could not be implied that the stipulation as to the two years' notice to quit was one of the terms under which the tenant held.—*TOOKER v. m. Notice to quit necessary—Though lease provides for no notice.—T. was tenant of a farm under a lease from L., expiring as to arable land at Martinmas, 1799, & as to the houses & grass at Whitsuntide, 1800. The tack obliged him to slit & remove "precisely at the expiry hereof, without any previous warning or process of removing for that effect." In Sept., 1799, T. had notice from L. in writing that the land was let to another tenant. In Oct., 1799, T. was charged on letters of horning on the tack to remove at Martinmas, 1799, and Whitsunday, 1800:—Held: T. entitled to a warning in terms of the Act of 1555 or a charge of forty days before

Whit-Sunday, 1799, in terms of the provision for such a case in the Act of Sederunt, 1756.—LOCKHART v. TWADDLE (1800), Hume, 564.—SCOT.

30 i. Notice to quit unnecessary—Lessee permitted to continue in possession for one year.—The tenant of an agricultural farm was allowed by the landlord to continue in possession for one year after the expiry of his lease:—Held: formal warning was not necessary for removing the tenant at the end of the year, & sufficient intimation had been given to the tenant & received & acted on by him, the landlord having advertised the farm with vacant possession from Martinmas, 1839, & the tenant having made an offer on that advertisement.—*BLAIN v. 28. Second notice to quit — No waiver of previous notice.—A landlord gave a notice to quit different parts of a farm at different times, which the tenant neglected to do in part, in consequence of which the landlord commenced an ejectment, & before the last period mentioned in the notice was expired, the landlord, fearing that the witness by whom he was to prove the notice would die, gave another notice to quit at the respective times in the following year, but continued to proceed with his ejectment:—Held: the second notice was no waiver of the first.—DOE d. WILLIAMS v. HUMPHREYS (1802), 2 East, 237; 102 E. R. 360.

29. Determination by award of arbitrator.—An action against the owner of land & a party holding by his permission, but claiming to hold as bailiff & not as tenant, was referred to an arbitrator, who was to say what was to be done by the parties with respect to the land. He awarded that the holding was as tenant, that the tenancy should cease on the delivery of the award, and that possession of the land should be delivered up to the owner in one month after:—Held: the award did not of itself change the property.—*THORPE v. 31. Who entitled to benefits of covenants by tenant—Purchaser.—Deft. purchased a farm (which was in occupation of an out-going tenant) upon a sale under order of ct., subject to such tenant right as the outgoing tenant should possess. The term of the tenant expired at Michaelmas, 1890. By the stipulations of his agreement the tenant was bound in the last year of tenancy to stock in the barns, etc., all corn, hay, etc., produced on the premises, the hay, etc., to be there consumed by cattle, & the dung, etc., to be left on the premises, for which purpose the tenant should have the use of such barns, etc., until Mar. 25, after the end of the tenancy; & also to leave all hay, etc., remaining unconsumed & be paid for it. Deft. paid the purchase price & took possession upon Oct. 13, 1890; but the conveyance was not executed, & the legal estate in the property remained vested in plffs. The rent due from the tenant at Michaelmas, 1890, was not paid, & at the instance of plffs., the receiver appointed by the ct. put in a distress for it, & seized certain hay, etc., produced during the last year of the term. Deft. moved the ct. that the receiver might be restrained from remaining in possession of the goods distrained:—Held: (1) deft. by purchase was in equity the beneficial owner of the property, & plffs. could not be permitted in equity to exercise any legal rights vested in them so as to prevent his full enjoyment of every benefit of ownership; (2) deft. was entitled to the benefit of the above stipulations in the agreement of the outgoing tenant, & the distress would in effect deprive deft. of this benefit; (3) plffs., though they had a right at law to distrain, must be regarded in equity as trustees for deft., & could not be allowed to distrain, & deft.'s application should be granted.—Re POWERS, MANISTY v. ARCHDALE (1890), 63 L. T. 626; 39 W. R. 185.

32. Trustee in bankruptcy—Effect of disclaimer.—The trustee in a bkpcy. may disclaim a lease of bkpt., even though the lease has been determined by effluxion of time or by forfeiture, between the appointment of the trustee & the execution of the disclaimer. And in such a case the effect of the disclaimer, when executed, is that neither the lessor nor the trustee can claim the benefit of any provisions contained in the lease which were to come into operation at the expiration or sooner determination of the term.—Re MORRISH, Ex p. HART deliver up possession at the end of six months, the compensation being duly paid. Deft. served plff. with a notice that he had sold the farm, in consequence of which plff. desisted from putting in crops, & other work for which he had made preparation, & rented another farm. Upon ascertaining that the notice was untrue, plff. refused to give up possession, & sued deft. for false representation:—Held: plff. entitled to recover damages sustained by him in consequence of the notice.—COWLING v. DICKSON (1880), 5 A. R. 549.—CAN.

o. Lease set aside as invalid—Tenant's right to damages.—A tenant, under a lease with warrantice, having removed from his farm when all the leases in similar circumstances on the estate were set aside (one having been selected in which to try the question of their validity):—Held: although no decree of removal had been pronounced against him (in consequence of the summons having been erroneously directed against his uncle), he was entitled to damages as for eviction.—MENZIES v. QUEENSBERRY (EXECUTORS) (1832), 11 Sh. (Ct. of Sess.) 18.—SCOT.

q. Removal fixed at period subsequent to death of lessee—Right of lessor's creditors to cultivate during period between death & term for removal.—Where the covenant by the tenant for removal from a farm under a life-rent lease fixes the removal at a period subsequent to the death of the tenant, that does not per se entitle the representative of the tenant to cultivate the farm during the period between the death & the term for removal, in the absence of anything else to give a title of possession after the death of the tenant.—TWEEDDALE (MARQUIS) v. MURRAY (1817), 6 Bell, Sc. App. 125.—SCOT.

33. Who liable under covenants by tenant—Sub-lessee or assignee—Effect of forfeiture.—A tenant held a farm under a lease containing a covenant against sub-letting & a clause giving the right to enter in case of bkpcy. or liquidation. The tenant covenanted not to dispose of any hay, straw, etc., from off the premises, but to consume same thereon, & on delivery up of the premises leave thereon all the hay, etc., grown thereon & not consumed, on being paid for same by valuation. The tenant died, & his son by agreement with the extrix. became tenant without the consent or knowledge of the landlord. The son became bkpt. Before the expiry of the term the lease was handed over by the extrix. to the landlord. The trustee in bkpcy. of the son claimed from the landlord the return of certain hay, straw, etc., which were on the farm when the son's petition was filed, & damages for their detention, & contended that the hay, straw, etc., were the property of the son, that the landlord had refused to recognise the son as tenant, & that the son was not bound by the lease. For the landlord it was contended that the son could not be in a better position than the tenant, & that the landlord was entitled to forfeiture upon his liquidation:—Held: (1) a sub-lessee or assignee, even when there was a covenant not to sub-let or assign, was bound by the lease; (2) the landlord by the same act recognised the son's tenancy & asserted the right of forfeiture; (3) when a lease was determined by forfeiture, the provisions in the lease could not be applied which were in favour of the tenant on expiry of the term by time.—*SILCOCK v. —By an agreement plff., a tenant, had the use of milk of cows which were to be depastured on lands described as “summerleazes.” In an action against the landlords for putting their own cattle on the lands, evidence was tendered for defts. that in the locality it was the custom for a lessor to put his own cattle on “summerleazes”:—Held: such evidence, being in effect evidence of the meaning of the technical word “summerleazes,” was admissible to show what rights passed to plff. under the lease.—TUDGAY v. SAMPSON (1874), 30 L. T. 262.

33 i. Who liable under covenants by tenant—Tenant & assignee.—A lease was granted to a tenant & assignees declaring that the assignees must be approved of by the landlord, or grant satisfactory security. The tenant assigned:—Held: it was the duty of the tenant to deliver, & not of the landlord to require, this security, & the tenant was liable in damages for misappropriation.—*GEMMEL v. Where A. agreed in writing to take the eatage of 24 acres of land from B. for seven months at a rent of £40, & stocked the land with beasts, several of which died a few days afterwards from the effect of a poisonous substance which had accidentally been spread over the field without B.'s knowledge:—Held: A. not entitled to throw up the land, but continued liable for the whole rent.—SUTTON v. TEMPLE (1843), 12 M. & W. 52; 13 L. J. Ex. 17; 2 L. T. O. S. 150; 7 Jur. 1065; 152 E. R. 1108.

SUB-SECT. 3.—CUSTOMS OF THE COUNTRY IN GENERAL.

Reasonableness, proof & exclusion of customs in general, see CUSTOM & USAGES.

37. Meaning of custom of country.]—What is considered in farming as a good & husbandlike manner varies according to soil, climate & situation. The "custom of the country" with reference to good husbandry means the approved habits of husbandry in the neighbourhood under circumstances of like nature (LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J.).—LEGH v. HEWITT (1803), 4 East, 154; 102 E. R. 789.

38. Must have existed reasonable time—Not from time immemorial.]—An agricultural custom need not have subsisted from time immemorial, but it must have subsisted for a reasonable length of time & must be adequately proved. As regards proof, a custom must be collected, not from what the witnesses think the custom is, but from what was publicly done throughout the district (JESSEL, M.R.).—TUCKER v. LINGER (1882), 21 Ch. D. 18; 51 L. J. Ch. 713; 46 L. T. 894; 30 W. R. 578, C. A.; affd. (1883), 8 App. Cas. 508, H. L.

39. — — —.]—In point of law an agricultural custom or custom of husbandry, whether relating to the cultivation of the land or regulating the rights & liabilities of landlord & tenant, in the absence of agreement, need not be an immemorial custom. Common usage in the neighbourhood is sufficient (CHITTY, J.).—DASHWOOD v. MAGNIAC, [1891] 3 Ch. 306, at p. 324; 60 L. J. Ch. 210; 64 L. T. 99; 7 T. L. R. 189.

40. Need not be general custom—Must be general in particular district.]—With regard to an alleged custom for the tenant to recover compensation for half tillage, crops sown, etc., during the away-going year, it was objected that the custom was not a general custom, but prevailed only in a particular district. It appeared to prevail in the immediate neighbourhood of deft.'s estates, & was almost confined to those estates:—Held: it was sufficient for pltf. to show that the custom existed in the particular place.—SENIOR v. ARMYTAGE (1816), Holt, N. P. 197.

Annotations:—Mentd. Dalby v. Hirst (1819), 1 Brod. & P. 224; Webb v. Plummer (1819), 2 B. & Ald. 746; Hutton v. Warren (1836), 1 M. & W. 466; Brown v. Burtinshaw (1876), 7 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 603.

41. — — — Application to particular estate insufficient.]—The rule of law, as to importing into the terms of the tenancy "the custom of the country," does not admit of evidence of the usage of a particular estate or the property of a particular individual, however extensive it may be, it not being shown that the tenant was aware of it.

The law takes cognisance of the divisions of the country into countries or parishes, which are legal & public divisions, but not into estates, which are purely private; & there would be no legal presumption of notoriety arising from the fact of usage as to terms of letting on a particular estate (POLLOCK, C.B.).—WOMERSLEY v. DALLY (1857), 26 L. J. Ex. 219.

42. Only applies to agricultural holdings.]—The custom of the country applies only to farm & agricultural premises, not to a mere residence with garden & meadow attached, let furnished, & occupied for one year, though the tenant of such a property would be liable to an action for ploughing up the meadow. The landlord cannot recover damages from the tenant for dealing with the straw grown on the meadow so ploughed up as a distinct breach of good husbandry & the custom of the country, whatever may be the nature of the property.—JOHNSTONE v. SYMONS (1847), 9 L. T. O. S. 535; 11 J. P. 618.

PART III. SECT. 1, SUB-SECT. 2.

s. Lease of "clean" farm.]—Action for damages for fraudulent representations, whereby pltf. were induced to lease a farm at a very high rental. The false representation was that the farm was a clean farm, whereas in fact it was full of weeds:—Held: the expression "clean farm" did not mean a farm absolutely free from weeds, but only one on which there were not weeds in such quantities as to be materially injurious to the crops.—JOHNSTONE v. HALL (1894), 10 Man. L. R. 161.—CAN.

PART III. SECT. 1, SUB-SECT. 3.

t. Evidence of custom as to meaning of "interest."]—A tenant bound himself to pay "interest" on sums expended on improvements on his farm at the rate exacted by Scottish Drainage & Improvement Co.:—Held: (1) the interest charged by the co. was alone payable, & not an annual rentcharge paid to them by the landlord, as that included a repayment to account of the capital borrowed; (2) proof of the usage of the country, to the effect that "interest" was understood to mean the whole sum payable to the co., was inadmissible.—SINCLAIR v. M'BEATH (1868), 7 Macph. (Cl. of Sess.) 273.—SCOT.

Sect. 1.—In General: Sub-sects. 3 & 4. 2:
Sub-sect. 1, A.

43. Application where written agreement.]—No inquiry should be made as to the custom of the country where there is a written agreement on the subject.—LIEBENROOD v. VINES (1815), 1 Mer. 15; 35 E. R. 583.

44. —.]—A special agreement in order to control the custom [for the tenant to recover compensation for half tillage, crops sown, etc., during the away-going year] must be of such a nature that it operates upon, & prevents, in express terms, the application of the custom (THOMPSON, C.B.).

Although there is a written contract between landlord & tenant, the custom of the country will still be binding, if not inconsistent with the written contract (BAYLEY, J.).—SENIOR v. ARMYTAGE (1816), Holt, N. P. 197.

45. —.]—Where the benefit of a custom is claimed as incidental to a written agreement for letting a farm, the questions are, (1) whether the custom exists: (2) whether the written agreement by express words, or the inconsistency of its terms with it, excludes the custom.

In an action against a landlord by his former tenant, who had held under a written agreement, for money due at the end of the tenancy by the custom of the country, the witness called to prove the custom could not say whether it applied where the letting was in writing. The jury were directed that there was no sufficient evidence of the custom prevailing:—Held: the evidence was wrongly rejected, & a rule for a new trial was granted on the ground of misdirection.

The question is the existence of the custom. If it exists, it applies to all agreements, written or unwritten, which either do not exclude it by express words, or, by the nature of the stipulations contained in them, rebut the presumption of law that the parties intended to be bound by the custom also (LORD DENMAN, C.J.).—WILKINS v. WOOD (1848), 17 L. J. Q. B. 319; 11 L. T. O. S. 291; 12 Jur. 583.

47. — "Usual covenants."]—Pltf. in replevin had taken & entered on a farm at a specified rent, & consented that an agreement should be prepared with the usual covenants, but no such agreement was prepared:—Held: (1) although the words "usual covenants" might be construed in the popular sense as "usual terms," they did not apply to the periods of payment of rent, but referred to agricultural covenants; (2) evidence could not be given, on the part of the landlord, of the usual terms or covenants in the same part of the country as to payment of rent in order to show that it was payable quarterly, so as to justify a distress for rent; (3) the lease of a former tenant of the same farm was not admissible in evidence.—HEYNES v. BROWN (1853), 21 L. T. O. S. 24.

49. Custom entitling tenant to sell flints ploughed up in course of husbandry—Reservation of mines, minerals, etc.]—A farm was let under a written agreement reserving to the landlord "all mines & minerals, sand, quarries of stone, brick earth & gravel pits." A local custom (which it was suggested had grown up within the last thirty or forty years) allowed tenants of such farms let with a similar reservation to take away the flints that were turned up in the ordinary course of good husbandry; & to sell them for their own benefit. If the flints were not turned up & removed such farms could not be properly cultivated:—Held: the custom was reasonable & valid, & when read into the written agreement was not inconsistent with the reservation, even assuming (but without deciding) that the reservation of "mines & minerals" included such flints.—TUCKER v. LINGER (1883), 8 App. Cas. 508; 52 L. J. Ch. 941; 49 L. T. 373; 48 J. P. 4; 32 W. R. 40, II. L.

50 i. Relation of landlord & tenant.]—In every agricultural lease the rules of good husbandry are an implied condition (LORD ARDMILLAN).—McCULLOCH v. GRIERSON (1862), 1 Macph. (Ct. of Sess.) 53.—SCOT.

50 ii. — Purchaser from trustee in bankruptcy.]—A party, who purchased

MACDONALD* (1860), 22 D. 1025; 32 Sc. Jur. 145.—SCOT.

50 iii. — Second lease omitting express covenants contained in prior lease.]—Pltf. leased land to deft.'s husband. The lease contained covenants by the lessee that he would cultivate in a good husbandlike & proper manner so as not to impoverish or injure the soil, & plough & crop same in a proper farmerlike manner. Afterwards a new lease was made substituting deft. as lessee, instead of her husband. This did not contain

51. — Necessity of special agreement to release tenant from obligation.]—A declaration that in consideration that deft. had become tenant to pltf. of a farm, deft. undertook to make a certain quantity of fallow & to spend £60 worth of manure every year thereon & to keep the buildings in repair:—Held: bad, those obligations not arising out of the bare relation of landlord & tenant.

Every tenant, where there is no particular agreement dispensing with that engagement, is bound to cultivate his farm in a husbandlike manner & to consume the produce on it; this is an engagement which arises out of the letting, & which the tenant cannot dispense with, unless by special agreement (GIBBS, C.J.).—BROWN v. There is no such implied contract between a parson & his successor. The exors. of an incumbent are not liable in an action for dilapidation for neglect to cultivate the glebe land in a husbandlike manner.

any of the above-mentioned covenants, or anything specially applicable to leases of farms, provided for the same rental payable in the same way & at the same time, & contained a covenant to plough in each year of the term 4 inches deep, which was written into it. 50 iv. — Breach of obligation—Erection of buildings.]—The tenant from year to year of a small parcel of land let to & treated & cultivated by him as an ordinary agricultural holding, & on which, at the time of the letting, there was only one cottage, erected or permitted to be erected certain dwelling-houses, the outer walls of which were of timber, & the foundations & partitions of brick, in which he permitted to reside the families of certain other tenants on the same estate, who had been evicted from their own holdings for non-payment of rent. These houses were erected in furtherance of the objects of an illegal conspiracy, & were kept up mainly for the purpose of deterring persons from taking the evicted farms. The holding in question was not suited for the erection of buildings, & the erection made a material change in the nature of the demised premises, & converted them, to a substantial extent, into a collection of dwelling-houses:—Held: (1) from such a letting it was to be implied that the tenant agreed with the landlord that he would preserve the premises as an agricultural holding during the demise; (2) the acts of the tenant were a breach of such agreement & should be restrained by injunction.—BROOKE v. The sheriff remitted to two farmers to inspect the lands, & on their report authorised the proprietor to cultivate the farm according to their recommendation, reserving all questions as to the expense of laying down the crop, etc. The tenant having presented a note of suspension & interdict against the proprietor acting upon this warrant on the ground that it was ultra vires of the sheriff to grant it, the ct. refused the note.

55 ii. — Failure to clear land.]—A lease of rectory land by the rector contained a covenant not to clear more than a certain portion of the land demised, that the clearing should be for agricultural purposes, in contiguous fields, not exceeding ten acres each, such fields to be enclosed in good lawful fences, " & shall be sufficiently chopped, underbrushed, logged, & burned, according to the due course of farming & good husbandry." The lessee, with the lessor's consent, cut & sold the timber off 180 acres, but for two years did nothing towards clearing this portion of the demised land:—Held: the delay was open to the objection of being contrary to "the due course of farming & good husbandry."—LUNDY v. 59. — Permitting goats to be on land.]—A lease for years of lands was granted, & the lessee covenanted to manage the demised premises in a husbandlike manner. The lessee having permitted goats to be upon the land, the lessor filed his bill for an injunction, & obtained one on an interlocutory application. The lessee did not move to dissolve, & on the cause coming on for hearing, the ct. made an order that the bill be retained for twelve months, with liberty to the lessor to bring an action, & if it were not brought within that time, the bill to be dismissed with costs, not exceeding a stated sum, the injunction to be continued meanwhile.—ROGERS v. PRICE (1849), 13 L. T. O. S. 463; 13 Jur. 820.

60. — Non-cultivation — Clause of forfeiture.]—By a lease empowering the lessee to build, he covenanted to cultivate the part of the demised land on which no buildings should be erected in a husbandlike manner, & there was a clause of forfeiture for breach of covenant. The lessee built a vitriol factory on the land, with the knowledge of the lessor, but being obliged to discontinue the manufacture by an indictment, he pulled down the manufactory, & paid part of the proceeds of the building materials to the lessor, in pursuance of an agreement between them:—Held: the lessor had not in equity precluded himself from entering for non-cultivation of the land after the manufactory was pulled down, & an injunction to restrain an action of ejectment was dissolved.—HILLS v. ROWLAND (1853), 4 De G. M. & G. 430; 22 L. J. Ch. 961; 22 L. T. O. S. 139; 1 W. R. 422; 43 E. R. 575, LJJ.

61. — Departure from four-course system — Mowing clover twice in year.]—In an agreement for a farming lease pltf. agreed to farm lands in a good & husbandlike manner on the four-course system & not to break up pasture, & to consume all hay & straw, clover & green crops on the lands & spread the manure arising therefrom on the land. In a suit for specific performance of the agreement there was a conflict of evidence whether pltf. had committed such breaches of covenant as would have created a forfeiture of the lease if granted:—Held: there was not on the evidence such breach of covenant as would have worked a forfeiture of the lease.

With regard to the four-course system, any slight departure from it would not necessarily work a forfeiture. There is a considerable difference of opinion as to the four-course system & what constitutes a breach of that system, particularly with regard to fallow, what would be a breach of the covenant that the land should lie fallow one year, whether a green crop is allowed, & what green crop is allowed. All that is left in doubt. As to mowing clover twice, I do not suppose that that would be such a breach of the covenant as would have been considered a proper ground for the forfeiture (LORD CAMPBELL, C.).—RANKIN v. LAY (1860), 2 De G. F. & J. 65; 29 L. J. Ch. 734; 2 L. T. 680; 24 J. P. 645; 6 Jur. N. S. 685; 8 W. R. 591; 45 E. R. 546, L. C.

62. — Conversion of moor land into place of amusement—Breach of earlier covenant to bring into cultivation.]—A lease of a plot of moor land was granted to a lessee, who covenanted to bring same into cultivation within five years from the date of the lease, according to the most approved method of husbandry pursued in the neighbourhood of the premises, & to keep same in good farming & husbandlike condition. The former covenant was not performed by the lessee, & thirty years afterwards his assignee converted the land into a place of amusement, & constructed a running path thereon, & charged for admission thereto. The lessor filed a bill to have the covenants of the lease performed, & for an injunction to restrain deft., the holder of the lease, from using the land as a place of public amusement:—Held: the land not having been brought into cultivation under the first covenant, there could have been no breach of the second to keep it in cultivation. Seemle: if there had been a breach of the latter covenant it was not such a one as the ct. would enforce by mandatory injunction.—*MUSGRAVE v. 61 i. — Departure from six-break shift.]—By a lease for sixty-eight years of "outfield" lands, the tenant was bound to labour & well & sufficiently to manure the lands, but no specific mode of cultivation was prescribed. During sixty-seven years no objection was made to the tenant's mode of cropping, but during the last year of the lease an action was brought against him for damages for not having laboured the lands in a husbandlike manner. Three persons appointed by the sheriff to inspect the farm reported that in the last year of the lease 82 acres out of the 92 acres of the farm were in white crop, & that during the immediately preceding years two & occasionally three white crops had been taken successively from some fields, & assuming that the proper course of management was a six-break shift, they estimated the loss due to miscropping at £260:—Held: (1) in the case of a long lease it was not enough for the tenant to leave the lands in the same situation in which he received them, but he must cultivate them according to the rules of good husbandry; (2) this had not been done, & the tenant was liable.—THOMSON'S REPRESENTATIVES v. OLIPHANT (1824), 3 Sh. & D. 275.—SCOT.

61 ii. — Tenant following prescribed course of husbandry but failing to comply with specific rules in lease.]—A lease contained a stipulation for the cultivation of the land let according to the rules of good husbandry, & that the lands should not be wasted or deteriorated. There were also certain specific rules laid down which, it was argued, were explanatory of these general terms:—Held: the tenant had in the cultivation of his farm followed the course which had been prescribed to him, & that, having done so, he could not be liable in damages for any deterioration thence arising.—STARK v. EDMONSTONE (1826), 5 Sh. & D. 45.—SCOT.

61 iii. — Departure from rotation in district.]—A tenant in an agricultural lease obliged himself to cultivate in a husbandlike manner & not to run out the lands, & also to leave one-fourth of the farm in pasturage at the end of the lease:—Held: he was bound to crop according to the rotation in practice in the district, if suitable to his lands.—CARRON CO. v. DONALDSON (1858), 20 D. 681.—SCOT.

61 iv. — Miscropping.]—A lease provided that the farm should be worked "in a proper & husbandlike manner," & not peyorated or run out, & also, "without prejudice to the foresaid rules & regulations," an additional rent of £6 per acre so miscropped was stipulated. The landlord sued the tenant (1) for damages on account of deterioration of the farm "by a course of management the reverse of proper & husbandlike," & (2) for £360 as additional pactional rent for miscropping at the rate of £6 per acre. The ct. found that 24 acres too much were in white crop, & decerned for £141 as pactional rent, & for £100 as damages for the general deterioration of the farm, in addition to the pactional rent of £144 for miscropping.—*WEMYSS (EARL) v. 65. — Particulars of breach—Non-cultivation—Overcropping.]—Ejectment by a landlord against his tenant to recover possession of the premises demised upon a forfeiture by breach of a covenant to cultivate the lands according to the most approved system of husbandry. Deft. obtained particulars of the breaches which plff. relied upon. The particulars of the breaches were for selling hay off the land, removing manure, & for non-cultivation:—Held: evidence of over-cropping & bad cultivation was inadmissible under these particulars.

Non-cultivation, in the particulars, means letting land go to waste. In those parts of the country which I am familiar with, I know that farmers often take land & let it run to waste; that is quite a different thing from over-cropping (BOSANQUET, J.).

Non-cultivation means omitting to cultivate. If breaking up grass land had been called non-cultivation, deft. would have been misled by the particulars (MAULE, J.).—DOE d. WINNALL v. BROAD (1841), 2 Man. & G. 523; Drinkwater, 113; 2 Scott, N. R. 685; 10 L. J. C. P. 80; 133 E. R. 855.

SUB-SECT. 2.—CULTIVATION ACCORDING TO CUSTOM OF THE COUNTRY.

A. When Implied.

67. No express agreement Breach of duty—Measure of damages.]—The duty of a tenant of agricultural land, as declared by the common law & unaffected by express agreement, is to cultivate the land in a good & husbandlike manner according to the custom of the country. He is not further bound to deliver up the land at the end of the tenancy in a clean & proper condition, properly tilled & manured, nor is he necessarily bound or entitled to leave the land in the same condition as when he took it. In case of a breach of his duty the measure of damages is the injury to the reversion occasioned by the breach.—WILLIAMS v. LEWIS, [1915] 3 K. B. 493; 85 L. J. K. B. 40; 113 L. T. 1161; 32 T. L. R. 42.

68. Subject to Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908—Enforcement by assignee of reversion.]—A tenant from year to year of a farm & building, at a rent, who has not entered into any other express tenant before the sheriff, for the purpose of having him interdicted from pursuing a course of management inconsistent with good husbandry & the stipulations of his lease, to conclude for damages in so far as injury should be suffered by his actual deviation.—FRASER v. McDONALD & JACKSON (1834), 12 Sh. (Cl. of Sess.) 684.—SCOT.

63 ii. — Miscropping—Averment of deterioration—Violation of lease.]—In an action of damages by a landlord against a tenant for miscropping a field in violation of his lease, he averred on record actual deterioration of the farm. The defence was that the lease did not apply to the field in question & that the field had been cropped according to the rules of good husbandry:—Held: pursuer was not bound to put in issue deterioration, but only violation of the lease.—MACKENZIE v. MONRO (1860), 23 D. 144.—SCOT.

PART III. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 2.—A.

a. Covenant to cultivate “in husbandlike & proper manner.”]—A covenant in a lease to cultivate the demised land “in a husbandlike & proper manner” means to cultivate according to the course of farm cultivation & management in that part of the country where the land is situate.—COULTER v. McCARTER (1911), 17 W. L. R. 720; 4 Sask. L. R. 178.—CAN.

b. Covenant to “farm” in husbandlike manner.]—A covenant to farm in a husbandlike manner means according to good husbandry in that part of the agreement with his landlord than as to the amount of the rent, is under an obligation implied by law to use & cultivate the land in a husbandlike manner, according to the custom of the country (subject to the above Act), & to keep the buildings wind & water-tight, & the assignee of the reversion can at common law enforce this implied obligation against the tenant.

Where a tenant of a farm & buildings, under a lease containing express covenants by him, continued in occupation after the expiration of the term, the landlord & tenant agreeing that the terms of the old lease should not apply, but not agreeing upon the terms of the new tenancy except that there should be a yearly tenancy at a fixed rent, & the landlord assigned the reversion during the continuance of the tenancy:—Held: the assignee of the reversion entitled to sue the tenant for breaches of the above-mentioned implied obligations which occurred after the assignment of the reversion.—*WEDD v. Not applicable to tenants in common.]—Although the ct. has jurisdiction, after a decree in a partition suit, to grant an injunction restraining a tenant in common in possession from committing destructive waste, it will not interfere to restrain a tenant in common in possession merely from farming contrary to the custom of the country as between landlord & tenant, that relation existing between him & the other tenants in common.—*BAILEY v. 70. Pleading—Averring precise custom.]—Plff., in an action against his tenant for mismanagement of a farm, set forth a precise custom as to the mode of cultivation, & alleged that deft. had not cultivated according thereto, which custom deft. traversed. The jury found that the custom was not as plff. had alleged, but deft. had not cultivated his farm according to the course of good husbandry in the neighbourhood:—Held: plff. bound by the precise custom, as he had stated it, & having failed to prove it, could not recover.—ANGERSTEIN v. HANDSON (1835), 1 Cr. M. & R. 789; 1 Gale, 8; 5 Tyr. 383; 4 L. J. Ex. 118; 149 E. R. 1299.

71. — Denial of custom alleged.]—The declaration, in an action by a landlord against his tenant, charged the latter with breach of duty in not cultivating land in a good & husbandlike manner & according to the custom of the country, in that he (amongst other things), contrary to the custom of the country, carried away hay without returning a proportionate quantity of manure. Deft., as to so much of the declaration as charged him with carrying away the hay contrary to the custom of the country, pleaded that no such custom existed that alleged:—Held: good on special demurrer.

c. How enforced.]—In a suit by a landlord against a tenant seeking inter alia to restrain deft. from tilling the demised premises in an injurious or unhusbandlike manner:—Held: (1) the ct. would not investigate the proper mode of cultivation of a farm; (2) the implied term of an agricultural contract, namely, to cultivate in a proper manner according to the custom of the country, was not more specific than a general covenant to keep in repair.

I do not think it is the proper subject of a suit in equity. . . . Plff. can have an adequate remedy in a ct. of law (CHATTERTON, V.-C.).—DUNN v. BRYAN (1872), 7 L. R. Eq. 113.—IR.

72. — Denial of tenancy.]—A declaration in case stated that defts. were tenants to pltf. of a farm, & by reason thereof it was their duty as such tenants to manage & cultivate the farm in a good & husbandlike manner, according to the custom of the country, & assigned breaches in over-cropping, etc. Plea that defts. were not, nor was either of them, tenants to pltf. of the messuage, etc., in manner & form as in the declaration alleged:—Held: this plea only put in issue the fact of the tenancy, & not the holding subject to a duty to cultivate according to the custom of the country, & defts. could not object on this record that a lease, under which the land had been originally taken, was not produced by pltf., in order to show that it did not exclude the custom.—HALLIFAX v. CHAMBERS (1839), 4 M. & W. 662; 7 Dowl. 342; 1 Horn & H. 417; 8 L. J. Ex. 117; 150 E. R. 1586.

74. — Evidence.]—In an action against a tenant upon promises that he would occupy the farm in a good & husbandlike manner according to the custom of the country, an allegation that he had treated the estate contrary to good husbandry & the custom of the country is proved by showing he had treated it contrary to the prevalent course of good husbandry in that neighbourhood, as by tilling half the farm at once, when no other farmer there tilled more than a third, though many tilled only a fourth. It is not necessary to prove any precise definite custom or usage in respect to the quantity tilled.—LEGH v. HEWITT (1803), 4 East, 154; 102 E. R. 789.

75. Whether breach—Question for jury.]—A. held a farm as tenant from year to year, upon a written agreement by which it was stipulated that he should cultivate the farm “in the same way & manner, or as near thereto as circumstances would admit of, as P. (the outgoing tenant) had used & cultivated same during his occupation thereof, & in all events according to the rule of good husbandry used & accustomed in the neighbourhood.” In an action against A., alleging for breach the cutting & carrying away of ash-poles, such user not being as near to the way & manner in which P. used & cultivated the farm as circumstances admitted, & being contrary to the rules of good husbandry used & accustomed in the neighbourhood, it appeared that the poles in question consisted of shoots growing from old stools, which were seasonable & fit for cutting about every seventeen or eighteen years; that, by invariable custom, they belonged to the landlord, in the absence of a special agreement to the contrary; that, whilst P. held the farm, these poles had never been in a fit state for cutting; that two tenants who had preceded P. in the occupation of the farm had cut & sold them as crops; & that A. had, whilst he occupied, paid the rates for the whole farm, including the wood or spinny in which the poles grew. The judge having omitted to leave to the jury upon what terms P. had held the farm, the ct.

granted a new trial.—HOOD (VISCOUNT) v. KENDALL (1855), 17 C. B. 260; 19 J. P. 823; 4 W. R. 123; 139 E. R. 1070.

76. — — —.]—Under a deed between pltf. & deft., pltf. agreed to give up a farm held by him of deft., & until such delivery up to cultivate according to the custom of the country, & deft. agreed, if pltf. cultivated the farm according to his covenant, to pay for the crops & manure at a valuation. In an action by pltf. for the amount of the valuation, it was objected that pltf. had not performed his covenants:—Held: the covenant to cultivate meant only so far as was universally obligatory by the custom of the country, & the question for the jury was whether substantially pltf. cultivated according to the custom, taking fairly into consideration that he was an outgoing tenant & was to be paid only according to the value of what he put into the ground.—NEWSON v. SMYTHIES (1859), 1 F. & F. 477.

77. — Conversion of arable land into market garden—Erection of glass-houses.]—Deft. held a farm from pltf. under a twenty-one years’ lease, which contained a covenant by the lessee to cultivate the farm in a good, proper, & husbandlike manner, according to the best rules of husbandry practised in the neighbourhood. Deft. claimed the right to erect glass-houses on arable land, part of the demised premises, & to cultivate tomatoes, mushrooms, grapes, & the like for the London market, a mode of cultivation which was being practised on other farms in the neighbourhood. Pltf. sought to restrain him from so doing:—Held: (1) this mode of cultivation was not prohibited by the express provisions of the lease; (2) whether it did or did not amount technically to waste, it was “meliorating” waste, in respect of which an injunction ought not to be granted, & the action was dismissed with costs.

The other provisions of the lease (e.g. a covenant not to convert pasture into arable & a covenant as to land left in fallow) would prevent the tenant covering the whole farm with glass-houses (KEKEWICH, J.).—MEUX v. COBLEY, [1892] 2 Ch. 253; 61 L. J. Ch. 449; 66 L. T. 86; 8 T. L. R. 173.

78. Pleading—Averment of breach—Sufficiency.]—A declaration in covenant, by a lessor against the assignee of the lessee, set forth a covenant by the lessee, for himself, his heirs, exors., administrators & assigns, that he & they should cultivate the land in a good husbandlike manner & according to the custom of the country. The count then averred entry of the lessee & assignment by him to deft., who entered, & was possessed until the expiration of the term. Breach, that deft., after the assignment, used & cultivated the land in a bad & unhusbandlike manner, & not according to the custom of the country:—Held: (1) the declaration was good; (2) breach of a covenant to cultivate according to the custom of the country was sufficiently averred by stating that deft. did not so cultivate, without specifying instances.—MARTYN v. CLUE (1852), 18 Q. B. 661; 22 L. J. Q. B. 147; 118 E. R. 249.

79 i. What is ancient pasture—Leased land not ploughed for thirty years.]—

Under a settlement of 1838 P. was tenant for life of lands, with remainder to pltf. in tail male, with power to P. during his life to grant leases for three lives, or any term of years not exceeding thirty-one years in possession, provided that none of the lessees should be authorised to commit waste, or exempted lease.]—An injunction to restrain a lessee from ploughing pasture lands, which had remained unploughed during the continuance of the lease for thirty years, but were ploughed within six years before its commencement, refused. Though the lease has continued thirty years, during all which time the pastures have been unploughed, yet that will not make them ancient pastures within the rule of the ct.; for as to the lessee himself who took these pastures subject to the liberty of ploughing, they remain still so, notwithstanding this forbearance; otherwise if they had been so long out of lease.—*GORING v. from impeachment for committing waste. By a lease of 1871 P. demised to deft., for thirty-one years, part of the settled lands. The lease contained an agreement that, in case any part of the lands demised should be broken up or tilled by the lessee, his exors., administrators, or assigns, he or they should, at least two years before the expiration or sooner determination of the term, lay down in a proper & husbandlike manner the lands so broken up or tilled with grass seeds, & should deliver up the lands properly laid down in grass. There was evidence that, at the date of the settlement of 1838, the land was not "ancient pasture." Pltf. proved that from 1838 to 1871 the land had never been broken up, & had been in grass. Deft. proved that a few years after the lease he had ploughed up a small portion of the land for the purpose of draining it, & had relaid it afterwards in grass. In an action for an injunction:—Held: (1) the whole of the lands demised were subject to the provisions of the lease, & it was open to deft. to show that the acts complained of were meliorative waste, & if so, the

ct. would not restrain him by injunction; (2) the lands demised were not really "ancient pasture."—PAIMER v. M'COR-

The ct. will not restrain an incumbent from ploughing up meadow infested with moss & weeds for the purpose of laying it down again in grass when properly cleaned.

The glebe land of a living which was ancient meadow & pasture, having much moss & weeds mixed with the grass, was about to be ploughed up by the incumbent with the view of cleaning it & laying it down again in grass:—Held: he ought not to be restrained by the ct. from ploughing up same. Qu.: whether a patron is in any case entitled to an injunction to restrain the incumbent from ploughing up ancient meadows.—ST. Construction—Lands not “lately” ploughed.]—Action for breach of covenant in ploughing lands not “lately” ploughed:—Held: the meaning of “lately” depended on circumstances, & fourteen or even twenty years might be “lately.” On a sale of lands, lately in the tenure & occupation of S., lands in his tenure twenty years before would pass.—GENNER v. 106. — Meaning of pasture lands.]—By an agreement, made in 1895, the predecessor in title of pltf. let a farm to deft. from year to year, subject to twelve months’ notice in writing from either party, & the tenant agreed not to commit any waste or spoil, or plough or break up any of the pasture lands, & further to farm the land upon the most approved system of husbandry practised in the neighbourhood. The farm contained 215 acres, of which the most part was pasture, but there were about 53 acres of arable land. Included in the latter was one field of 22 acres, which had been regularly tilled by the tenant for thirteen seasons before 1894, but in 1895 the tenant laid it down in grass because the crops had deteriorated in quality & quantity. In 1901 he broke up 9 acres of this field, but in 1902 he relaid it in grass. In Apr., 1909, the landlord gave the tenant notice to determine the tenancy. The tenant required the landlord to pay him, when he went out, for the grass land laid down, & on the landlord’s refusal, the tenant threatened to plough up this land again. In an action by the landlord for an injunction to restrain the tenant from so doing:—Held: (1) upon the true construction of the agreement, the tenant had not broken any of the covenants, as the “pasture lands” in the agreement referred solely to those parts of the farm which were meadow land at the date of the agreement; (2) ploughing the field would not have been waste or spoil on the tenant’s part; (3) an act which admittedly would not be a breach of covenant, while the tenant was not under notice, was not converted into a breach as soon as notice to quit was served; (4) the fact that the tenant’s conduct was dictated solely by a desire to force the landlord to compensate him did not affect the construction of the contract, or disentitle the tenant to costs of the action.—RUSH v. LUCAS, [1910] 1 Ch. 437; 79 L. J. Ch. 172; 101 L. T. 851; 54 Sol. Jo. 200.

Not to plough up ancient meadow or pasture—Sum payable on breach—Liquidated damages.]—In a lease for years of land, the lessee covenanted not to plough pasture land, & if he did, to pay after the rate of 20s. per annum for every acre ploughed:—Held: (1) the ct. would not grant an injunction against the tenant's ploughing, for the parties themselves had agreed the damage, & set a price for ploughing; (2) the ct. would not relieve the lessee against the penalty, if he ploughed.—*WOODWARD v. 108. ———.]—Where a lessee covenants not to plough up any ancient meadow or pasture ground, & if he does, to pay an additional yearly rent of £5 an acre, the increased rent is not to be considered as a penalty, but as a liquidated satisfaction, fixed & agreed upon by the parties, & upon an action brought for recovering it, an equity ct. ought not to interpose or give any relief.—*ROLFE v. 109. ———.]—In covenant by a lessor against the lessee upon a lease reserving an increased rent for every acre of certain lands converted into tillage, the jury by their verdict having given damages for actual injury sustained instead of the increased rent:—Held: (1) the ct. would not refuse pltf. a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was consistent with justice; (2) the judge having expressly directed the jury to find damages to the amount of the increased rent, the new trial should be granted without payment of costs.

There certainly is nothing unreasonable in a landlord stipulating that particular lands shall not be converted into tillage at all, & that in case that be done, a large sum shall be paid by way of stipulated damages (ABBOTT, C.J.).—FARRANT v. OLMUS (1820), 3 B. & Ald. 692; 106 E. R. 814.

110. ——— Satisfaction—Waiver.]—Covenant on an indenture of lease whereby the tenant covenanted to pay the rent of £50 half yearly, & over the above the reserved rent, the further yearly rent of £5 for every acre of the demised premises which deft. should convert into tillage, over & above one-third part thereof. Breach assigned for over tillage, whereby deft. became liable to pay £75 additional rent. Pleas, (1) after the committing of the supposed breaches of covenant, pltf., with the full knowledge of the supposed breaches of covenant, accepted & received from deft. £25 as & for all the rent due, in respect of the premises, up to & inclusive, etc., (covering the time alleged in the breach), without

107 i. Not to plough up ancient meadow or pasture—Sum payable on breach—How long payable.]—A lease contained covenants by the lessee to pay an increased rent of £20 for every acre which he should plough up over & above one-third part of the demised lands, & also that, in case he should plough one-third or greater or less part, he should lay same with clover or grass seeds. The lessee ploughed more than one-third, paid the increased rent for it, & then laid it down in pasture:—Held: the increased rent ceased to accrue from the time that the ploughed land had been restored to pasture.—DOMVILLE v. FORDE (1873), 7 I. R. C. L. 531.—IR.

107 ii. ——— For "each acre deficient."]—A landlord granted a lease on the condition, inter alia, that the tenant at removal should leave 60 acres in five years' old sown grass, but in case he should think it more to his advantage not to have the land in grass during these years, then he was to "pay to the landlord the sum of £5 sterling of additional rent for each acre deficient," at the terms & in the manner stipulated as to the principal rent. The tenant, after laying down the proper quantity during the last year, ploughed part of it:—Held: he was liable only in £5 for each acre so ploughed during that year, & not for each of the five years.—SUTTIE v. SOMNER (1828), 6 Sh. (Ct. of Sess.) 1122.—SCOT.

i. Not to break up more than fixed proportion of land—Lessee breaking up more.]—A tenant held a farm under a demanding or requiring the payment of such penalty or additional rent, & thereby then & there waived, gave up, & dispensed with his right to receive or recover any nomine pænæ or penalty, or such additional rent; (2) after the committing of the breaches of covenant, pltf., with a full knowledge, etc., waived, gave up, & dispensed with all claim or right on his part to receive, recover or be paid any such penalty, nomine pænæ or additional rent:—Held: both pleas were insufficient, the further yearly rent of £5 being not a penalty, but liquidated damages.—DENTON v. RICHMOND (1833), 1 Cr. & M. 734; 3 Tyr. 630; 2 L. J. Ex. 269; 149 E. R. 595.

111. ———.]—In a lease of land, the lessee, in addition to a certain reserved rent, covenanted to pay a penal rent for pasture land broken up or "used or converted to any other use than for meadow or pasture land." To a breach alleging non-payment of the reserved rent, deft. pleaded, "as to so much of the declaration as related to the sum of £150, parcel of the alleged arrears of rent in the declaration firstly mentioned," that, after same became due, & before commencement of the action, pltf. distrained certain goods, & sold them for a sum greater than the amount of the arrears of rent, & thereby satisfied & discharged the last-mentioned arrears:—Held: no answer.—ALDRIDGE v. HOWARD (1842), 4 Man. & G. 921; 5 Scott, N. R. 623; 134 E. R. 378.

112. ——— Threatened breach—Injunction.]—A tenant threatening a breach of a covenant not to plough an ancient meadow, on the breach of which he would have to pay an increase of rent, the ct. granted an injunction.—WEBB v. CLARK (1782), 1 Fonbl. Treatise of Equity, 154.

113. ——— Land described as meadow—Evidence.]—Where there is a reservation of £5 per acre during the last twenty years of a term for every acre of meadow thereby demised, which the tenant should plough, dig, ear, break up, or convert into tillage during the last twenty years of the term, & so after that rate for any greater or less quantity than an acre, or less term than a year, the rent is due in the last twenty years if the land is then ploughed, whether it was first ploughed within the last twenty years or before, & the rent continues payable during the twenty years though the land be again laid down to permanent grass. Land sown to clovers with corn is not thereby restored to a state of permanent pasture, but is still in tillage.

If a lease describe demised land as meadow land, no other evidence is necessary to prove it was meadow land at commencement of the term.—BIRCH v. STEPHENSON (1811), 3 Taunt. 469; 128 E. R. 186.

114. ——— Land broken for building purposes.]—An injunction was granted to restrain the tenant of a farm from breaking up meadow, contrary to covenant, for the purpose of building, the lease containing nineteen years' lease, the conditions of which implied a six-shift rotation of cropping & obliged him to cultivate according to the rules of good husbandry. It was in particular stipulated that not more than one-sixth of the land under a course of tillage should be broken up from lea in any one year. During several years preceding the last year of his lease the tenant had with the landlord's knowledge broken up from lea less land than he was entitled to break up, but for the crop of the last year of his tenancy he proposed to break up from lea land amounting to two-sixths in all of the amount of arable land:—Held: the landlord was entitled in respect of the provisions of the lease to interdict the tenant from breaking up more than one-sixth of arable land.—STAIR (COUNTESS) v. WILLISON (1883), 20 Sc. L. R. 315.—SCOT.

115. — Lands used as racecourse.]—A lessee covenanted to pay, in addition to a certain reserved rent, a penal rent for pasture land broken up or "used or converted to any other use than for meadow or pasture land":—Qu.: whether using the land as a racecourse & ground for training horses was a breach of the covenant; at all events, the question was one for a jury and not determinable by the ct. on demurrer.—ALDRIDGE v. HOWARD (1842), 4 Man. & G. 921; 5 Scott, N. R. 623; 134 E. R. 378.

116. — Exception for specified purposes—No licence to commit waste.]—A tenant for life punishable for waste had power to lease for twenty-one years certain ancient pasture land. The leasing power provided that "none of the lessees should be by any clause or words therein contained authorised to commit waste, or exempted from punishment for waste." The tenant for life demised the premises for twenty-one years by a lease which recited the power & contained a covenant by the lessee not to break up any of the pasture land demised, "except for the purpose of carrying out the allotment system," which had already been introduced by the tenant for life in a manner amounting to waste:—Held: (1) the exception in the covenant did not amount to a licence or authority to the lessee to commit waste by carrying out the allotment system; (2) if any implication could be made, so as to construe that exception as implying a permission to the lessee to do anything, it could not be inferred that it permitted him to do more than to carry out the allotment system during the life of the tenant for life so far as she had power to permit it, & not otherwise.—DOE d. HOPKINSON v. FERRAND (1851), 20 L. J. C. P. 202; 17 L. T. O. S. 183; 15 Jur. 1061.

117. — Eviction before breach.]—In an action by a landlord against the tenant on a farming lease for breaches of covenants not to plough meadow land, or pasture orchards, or lop trees, it is no answer to plead that, before any of the breaches, deft. was evicted by authority of pltf. from part of the demised premises.—NEWTON v. ALLEN (1841), 1 Q. B. 518; 1 Gal. & Dav. 44; 10 L. J. Q. B. 179; 6 Jur. 99; 113 E. R. 1231.

118. Lease of pasture farm—Injunction wrongly obtained — Damages against landlord.]—The tenants of a pasture farm upon which they maintained a flock of sheep proposed to plough up part of the pasture land & plant corn. The landlord obtained an interim injunction restraining them from so doing, with the result that the tenants were compelled to maintain the farm as a pasture farm. They kept their sheep on the land, & in consequence of a drought the sheep became depreciated in value. The interim injunction obtained by the landlord was dissolved at the hearing of the action, & in arbn. proceedings the tenants claimed as damages the net profit they would have made if they had ploughed the land & planted corn, & also the amount by which the sheep had deteriorated in value. It was contended for the landlord that the damages arising under the second head were too remote & could not be recovered:—Held: the tenants were entitled to damages under both heads of their claim.—Re PEMBERTON & COOPER & COOPER (1912), 107 L. T. 716.

119. Covenant to permit landlord to sow clover among tenant's barley—Sowing barley without giving landlord notice—No breach.]—Covenant "to permit pltf. in the last year of the term to sow clover among deft.'s barley." Breach that deft. sowed, etc., without giving pltf. notice. Plea that deft. did not prevent it:—Held: a good plea, as omission to give notice was not active prevention, which was the sole question involved, and as pltf. was the party for whose benefit the covenant was intended, he ought to have used due diligence.—HUGHES v. RICHMAN (1774), 1 Cowp. 125; 98 E. R. 1002.

120. Covenant to crop in specified manner—Construction.]—A covenant in a farming lease not to sow with more than two grain crops during four years:—Held: to apply to any four years of the term however taken, not to each successive four years from the commencement.—FLEMING v. SNOOK (1842), 5 Beav. 250; 49 E. R. 574.

121. — Meaning of "crops"—Rejection of evidence.]—In an action arising out of a farming lease, in which the word "crops" occurred, it was proposed to call witnesses to prove that a particular covenant, with reference to not taking more than so many crops, meant white crops, not crops generally. The evidence having been rejected:—Held: (1) the word "crops" was used in the lease in its ordinary & popular sense, & as including any crops; (2) the lease showed that the word "crops" was meant to include turnips as well as wheat crops; (3) the evidence was properly rejected.—NORTH v. WILLIAMS (1848), 12 L. T. O. S. 222.

GORDON* (1806), 13 F. C. 538.—SCOT.

120 ii. — Whether purchaser estopped.]—A. purchased an estate with entry at Whit-Sunday, 1837; at the same time a nineteen years' lease of one of the tenants expired, but he was allowed by the new proprietor to continue in possession of his farm for two years thereafter by tacit relocation. On the termination of the last year of possession, A. presented a petition to the sheriff, craving him, in respect of the tack, to appoint inspectors to report on an alleged miscropping of the farm, contrary to the terms of the lease:—Held: A. entitled to damages for miscropping, & his claim was not barred by the acquiescence of the former proprietor in former deviations on the part of the tenant from the lease.—HALL v. MCGILL (1847), 9 D. 1557.—SCOT.

120 iii. — Measure of damages.]—A farm lease contained covenants by the lessee that he would plough the land in each year 4 inches deep & crop same during the term in a proper farmerlike manner. Afterwards a new lease was made substituting deft. as lessee instead of her husband. The new lease contained the same covenant to plough 4 inches deep in each year written into it, but, by mistake, no express covenants to cultivate or crop. The cultivated portion of the farm was 117 acres, but deft. only ploughed & cultivated 4 acres out of the 117, & weeds grew up all over the rest:—Held: deft. was liable for the estimated value of one-third of the crop that would probably have been produced on the 117 acres, if it had been cropped in that year, & for deterioration in value of the land on account of deft. having allowed it to grow up with weeds.—*DUNSFORD v. 123. — Pleading breach—Sufficiency of replication.—Pltf. covenanted in a lease not to take more than two crops of grain in succession, & that he would plant with potatoes, or sow with peas or beans twice well hoed. Deft. pleaded, as a breach of this covenant, that pltf. took more than two crops of grain successively, & did not nor would plant with potatoes, nor sow with peas which were twice well hoed. The replication traversed that pltf. took more than two crops of grain successively, & alleged that pltf. planted part of the land, consisting of, etc., with potatoes & sowed another part, consisting of, etc., with peas & the residue, consisting of, etc., with beans which were twice well hoed:—Held: as the plea showed no breach of the latter part of the covenant, the replication was a sufficient answer to the material matter alleged in the plea.—HAMMOND v. COLLS (1845), 1 C. B. 916; 14 L. J. C. P. 288; 5 L. T. O. S. 515; 135 E. R. 803.

124. — Damages or penal rent on breach.—By an indenture, a farm & land were demised to a tenant at a yearly rent, & also under & subject to certain yearly payments, in case the tenant should not crop, manure, & manage the farm in manner therein specified & covenanted, & also in case the tenant, in the last three years of the term, should sow more than 70 acres of clover in one year, the additional rent of £10 an acre for every acre above 70 acres, for the residue of the term:—Held: (1) the additional rents were in the nature of liquidated damages, not of penalties; (2) on a bill filed by the landlord for a discovery of breaches of the covenants in aid of an action at law, a plea that the discovery might subject the tenant to penalties was overruled.—JONES v. GREEN (1829), 3 Y. & J. 298; 148 E. R. 1193, Ex. Ch.

125 i. — Damages or penal rent on breach—Assessment of damages.—A tenant bound himself to follow a particular mode of culture for every year of the tack, from which, if he deviated, he was to pay £5 of additional yearly rent for each acre cultivated differently, & “which additional rent shall not be considered as penal, but as pactional.” The landlord subsequently sent the tenant a scheme of cropping in some respects different. The tenant having deviated from both this & the stipulated mode, the landlord sued for additional rent. The tenant pleaded that the additional rent could not be transferred to the new scheme, as that prescribed in the lease had been abandoned, & at any rate, that the additional rent was, in reality, a penalty, & therefore, subject to an equitable modification:—Held: (1) the additional missive furnished by the landlord to the tenant merely changed the rotation of cropping, but left all the other stipulations & penalties of the former tack unchanged, & applicable to the new rotation; (2) the tenant was liable.—MORRISON v. BLAIR (1823), 2 Sh. (Ct. of Sess.) 241.—SCOT.

125 ii. ——It was provided by a lease that a tenant should not take two white crops, or plough up for crop any part of the farm which had not been three years in grass, & if he deviated from this rotation he should pay £10 of additional rent for each acre so cropped for the last three years of the lease. In the penult year of his lease he cropped a field which had not been three years in grass, & also cropped the same field in the last year of the lease:—Held: the tenant was liable in the additional rent for both years.—LAWSON v. OGILVY (1834), 7 Wils. & S. 397; 10 Sh. (Ct. of Sess.) 531; 7 F. C. 403.—SCOT.

g. Departure from prescribed mode of cropping—Additional rent on breach.—A tack stipulated that the tenant was at liberty to deviate from the mode of cropping & management laid down in the tack upon his paying £2 per acre more of additional rent to the landlord. He departed from the mode of cropping. The Ct. of Session decided that he was liable to pay the additional rent, but the House of Lords remitted the case to ascertain & determine specially what was the number of acres the tenant became bound to cultivate in the manner specified in the tack, & what was the number of acres cultivated contrary to the conditions thereof.—STRATTON v. GRAHAM (1789), 3 Pat. App. 110.—SCOT.

h. ——A tack contained a clause prescribing “the course of labouring during the currency of the tack & that under a penalty of £3 for each acre laboured otherwise than as above, to which the damages are hereby estimated, without power to any judge to modify them on any pretence whatever”:—Held: the tenant, not having adhered to the mode of management pointed out by the lease, must make payment of the penalty stipulated by the tack.—HENDERSON v. MAXWELL (1802), 13 F. C. 49.—SCOT.

i. ——A tenant being bound by his tack either to cultivate his farm in a certain manner, or to pay an additional rent, will not be excused for changing the routine, even though it should become expedient by circumstances not imputable to himself, without first obtaining the consent of the landlord.—FRASER v. EWART (1813), 17 F. C. 223.—SCOT.

j. — Covenant not optional.—An interdict was brought by the landlord against the tenant to prohibit him from ploughing & cropping the farm in violation of the mode of cropping laid down in the lease. The lease provided that the tenant was to keep the fourth part of the farm yearly either in hay or pasture, or to pay an additional rent over & above the year's rent, & the tenant contended that this gave him an option to deviate on paying the additional rent:—Held: the clause was prohibitive & not alternative in its nature, & the tenant had no option to deviate on paying the additional rent.—CRAIGIE v. MACKENZIE (1815), 6 Pat. App. 117.—SCOT.

k. ——A tenant having entered into possession of a farm, on a missive of lease for nineteen years, prescribing a certain course of cultivation for the first sixteen years, & another during the last three years, under the penalty of paying an additional rent for these last years, & not having complied with the rules so prescribed:—Held: (1) he was liable in the penal rent; (2) it was not a valid defence that he had adopted the same course as the other tenants on the estate, & as was prescribed by their leases, or that he had done so with the knowledge of the landlord.—MILLER v. GWYDIR (1826), 2 Wils. & S. 52.—SCOT.

l. — Application to pasture land.—A farm consisted of two portions, one being arable land permanently under rotation, the other pasture, the fields of which were only occasionally broken up. In an action for additional penal rent under an agricultural lease in respect of miscropping:—Held: clauses prescribing the mode of cropping the “land under cultivation,” & fixing a penal rent for miscropping, did not apply to the pasture land, & the landlord had no claim for damage in respect of the cropping of the pasture land except at common law.—THREIPLAND v. MUNRO (1861), 23 D. 1252.—SCOT.

m. — Lease inoperative.—A landlord presented a petition of sequestration for rent, alleging that his tenant had incurred a penalty in the lease of additional pactional rent, in respect that he had contravened the third year rotation:—Held: the contravention took place when the lease was not operative, & there being no action under the lease, petition dismissed.—WILLIAMS v. WHITE & YOUNG (1866), 2 Sc. L. R. 80.—SCOT.

n. — How far applicable.—A lease referred to regulations of older date, in which a seven shift rotation of crops was prescribed, & in which there was a clause of pactional rent for miscropping. The lease prescribed a six shift rotation, & the tenant several years before the expiry of the lease changed it to a five shift:—Held: on a proof, that the landlord had acquiesced in the change; but question whether, apart from acquiescence, the clause as to pactional rent, being in the regulations when a seven shift was provided for, applied to the lease in which a six shift was the rotation.—TAYLOR v. DUFF (1869), 7 M. 351.—SCOT.

o. ——A tenant engaged to cultivate farm lands according to the most approved rules of good husbandry. It was stipulated that should the tenant infringe the stipulations as to cropping, an additional rent of £5 per acre miscropped should become payable:—Held: (1) the tenant not liable in the penalties in the lease for miscropping in consequence of his not having left a certain field in grass at the renunciation of his lease, in respect that there had been no miscropping; (2) the landlord would have reserved to him his right to sue for damages for breach of agreement.—COLVIN v. DUNBAR (1870), 8 Sc. L. R. 149.—SCOT.

p. — Acquiescence by landlord—Tenant's liability to purchaser.—A tenant of a farm, held under a lease of nineteen years, which prescribed a five shift course of cropping, except by permission of the landlord, soon after his entry commenced a system of improvement by which he increased the arable land from 400 acres to 800, & in consequence departed from the prescribed course of cropping. His system of management was known to, & approved of by, his landlord. The farm was sold in three portions:—Held: the tenant was not liable in damages for mis-cropping to a purchaser, as (1) the latter had visited the farm before purchase, & might have seen that it was not arranged on a five shift course, & (2) the alleged contravention was a necessary consequence of the previous alteration in cropping which had taken place before the date of the sale, under a system of management approved of by the then landlord.—*CARNEGIE v. q. ——— Whether estoppel.]—An agricultural lease for nineteen years prescribed a six & seven shift rotation respectively for different portions of the subject, under pactional additional rent for each acre miscropped. The tenant deviated from the stipulated rotation very soon after his entry & continued to do so in the knowledge of the landlord's factor, who did not remonstrate. The rents were paid & receipts given without reservation until the last year of the lease. In an action to recover pactional rent for the last year:—Held: the fact of the landlord's acquiescence in the tenant's violation of the conditions of the lease barred the claim.—*LAMB v. r. ———.]—A lease provided that in each year not more than one half of the farm should be in white crop, & that the other half should be in grass, fallow or green crop. The landlord permitted fruit culture for a number of years, but early in the last year of the lease he objected that the provisions of the lease must be observed & the fruit ground brought back into the prescribed rotation by Martinmas term. The landlord claimed pactional rent for miscropping:—Held: (1) strawberries & raspberries were neither grass, fallow, nor green crop, as fruit involved a quite different kind of cultivation, which was not permitted by the lease; (2) in the circumstances the landlord's acquiescence could not avail defender.—CALLANDER v. SMITH (1900), 8 S. L. T. 109.—SCOT.

s. Farm let to joint tenants — Obligations imposed.]—A farm was let to two joint tenants for one year, one of the joint tenants having been sole tenant for seven years previously:—Held: the joint tenants were bound to adhere to the rotation of crops in operation on the farm, & were bound to have the whole young grass hained for a hay crop, & not merely the same acreage of young grass as they had received hained at their entry.—McCULLOCH v. GRIERSON (1862), 1 M. 53.—SCOT.

B. in one year took a third crop of corn without seeding down:—Held: B. liable to the penal rent of £20 per acre during the residue of the term, though the branch of the covenant imposing such penalty did not contain the terms "further yearly rent" which were contained in the other branches of such covenant.—*BOWERS v. 128 i. Tenant's general right of removal.]—Application for interdict against a tenant removing from his farm or selling the straw & fodder raised & grown on it. The ground of the application was that the tenant was bound to consume the straw & fodder grown & raised on the farm in conformity with the rules of good husbandry & not to sell it, which he threatened to do. The defence was that there was no steading & offices on the farm whereby the grain might be manufactured & the fodder consumed. Petition refused.—MITCHELL v. ADAM (1866), 1 Sc. L. R. 247.—SCOT.

129. Removal contrary to custom—By yearly tenant—Under notice to quit.]—Injunction to restrain a tenant from year to year under notice to quit, as in the case of a lessee for a longer term, from doing damage, & from removing the crops, manure, etc., except according to the custom of the country.—ONSLOW v. — (1809), 16 Ves. 173; 33 E. 130. Under agreement to farm in husbandlike manner.]—A tenant from year to year agreed to cultivate his farm in a husbandlike manner. He removed from the farm certain hay & straw. On proof that it was contrary to the custom of the country for a tenant from year to year to remove any of these articles, an injunction was granted to restrain him.—WALTON v. JOHNSON (1848), 15 Sim. 352; 12 Jur. 299; 60 E. R. 654.

131. Custom that incoming should pay outgoing tenant for straw—Agreement to consume hay & straw on premises—Custom not excluded.]—By the terms of a farm lease for seven years, expiring at Michaelmas, the tenant agreed to cultivate the land according to the custom of the country, & “during the term to consume with stock on the farm all the hay, straw & clover grown thereon, which manure shall be raised on the farm,” & the landlord agreed to let the tenant occupy part of the homestead until Midsummer Day after expiration of the term, if necessary, “to end the cropping of the tenant grown on the premises”:—Held: the lease did not exclude the custom of the country, by which the tenant, having paid for straw on his incoming, was entitled to be paid for straw on his quitting, & an action was maintainable against the succeeding tenant for the straw left by the outgoing tenant on the farm at expiration of the term.—MUNCEY v. DENNIS (1856), 1 H. & N. 216; 26 L. J. Ex. 66; 20 J. P. 792; 156 E. R. 1182.

132. Custom prohibiting selling off produce—Not applicable to tenancy in common.]—Deft., a tenant in common, was in possession of a farm without the consent of plff., one of the other two tenants in common, & under no agreement for a lease with either of them, but he paid his share of mtge. interest. After a decree for sale in a partition suit deft. proposed to sell the hay & turnips from off the land, contrary to the custom of the country as between landlord & tenant:—Held: the selling of the hay & turnips was what deft. had a perfect right to do & was not such a destruction of the property as the ct. would restrain.—BAILEY v. HOBSON (1869), 5 Ch. App. 180; 39 L. J. Ch. 270; 22 L. T. 594; 18 W. R. 124, C. A.

133. To consume hay on premises or bring on manure for hay removed—Sale of hay on quitting—Refusal by incoming tenant to permit removal of hay until manure brought on.]—A tenant was bound either to consume the hay on the demised premises, or for every load of hay removed to bring two loads of manure. On quitting possession of the premises, he sold part of a rick of hay then left standing to a purchaser, without mentioning his liability to bring manure. The incoming tenant refused to allow the purchaser to take away the hay until the manure was brought on. After an interval of a month, during which the hay had been considerably damaged, the former consented to its removal, but the purchaser refused to accept or pay for same:—Held: (1) although the bringing on the manure was not a condition precedent to the carrying off the hay as between the landlord & tenant, still, after the tenant had quitted possession of the premises, the succeeding tenant had a right to refuse to permit the hay to be removed till after the manure was brought on; (2) as the vendor had not enabled the purchaser to remove the hay in the first instance, he was not entitled to recover the price.—SMITH v. CHANCE (1819), 2 B. & Ald. 753; 106 E. R. 540.

134. — Assignment of breach—Pleading.]—B., defts.' testator, covenanted that he would not, during the lease which extended generally till Sept. 29, 1820, sell or convey away from the premises any of the straw which, during the leased term, should grow upon the premises (except wheat-straw & rye-straw), & for every load of hay, wheat-straw, & rye-straw, which should be sold or removed off from the premises during the thereby leased term, he, B., would bring back a cartload of dung, & plff. covenanted that it should be lawful for B. to have the use of the barns, etc., for receiving his crops of corn & hay which should grow upon the premises in the last year before the end of the term thereby granted, & for certain other purposes, until May 1 next after the expiration of the term, without paying any rent for same. The fourth breach assigned was that B., during the leased term, to wit, on Sept. 30, 1820, & on divers other days between that day & May 1, 1821, did remove off from the premises large quantities of hay, wheat-straw, & rye-straw without bringing back a cartload of dung for each load of hay & straw. Plea to so much of that breach as related to removing hay, etc., during the leased term, that B. did bring back a load of dung for each load of hay, etc., removed, & demurrer to the residue of that breach. Joinder in demurrer. Defts. also pleaded to all the breaches, except the fourth, & to so much of that as related to removing hay, etc., during the leased term, a release of all causes of action, except such as plff. had in respect of B. not bringing back to the premises manure for the hay, etc., removed after Sept. 29, 1820. Demurrer & joinder:—Held: (1) the plea to the fourth breach answered the whole of that breach, & the demurrer to the residue was bad; (2) the leased term continued for certain purposes until May 1, 1821, so that the release did not extend to all acts of removal done during the leased term, & the plea of release did not answer so much of the adjoined another extensive farm held by him from C. G. presented a petition to the sheriff, alleging that F. had carried off the crop & fodder raised on his farm to the other one, & praying to ordain him to bring them back. F. contended that it was part of his agreement with G. that the two farms should be managed jointly, & by means of the steading on the larger, there not being a sufficient one on the smaller farm. The Lord Ordinary found the agreement proved, & that, although no tenant was entitled to carry off his crop to another farm, by which means the landlord might not only be deprived of his hypothec, but the right of having the fodder consumed upon the farm might be disappointed, yet this rule could only apply where there were means, by a proper farm-steading, of manufacturing the grain, & by proper offices of consuming the fodder upon the farms, & remitted simpliciter to the sheriff. To this judgment the ct. adhered.—GORDON v. FALCONER (1822), 1 Sh. (Ct. of Sess.) 386.—SCOT.

135. ————.]—A covenant in a farming lease that the tenant should, during the demise, consume on the premises, for improvement of same, all hay, straw, etc., which should grow or be made upon the premises, but in case he should take or sell off any part thereof, which he was at liberty to do, then that he should, for every ton of hay or straw taken or sold off, bring back a certain quantity of manure within a certain space of time, is a covenant in the alternative. Where in an action for breach of such covenant, the declaration set forth only so much of the covenant as related to consuming the crops on the premises, & assigned for a breach the selling off & carrying away certain crops, without converting same into manure, & deft. pleaded non est factum & a traverse of the breach:—Held: the declaration was defective, & deft. was entitled to recover on his plea of non est factum, & an amendment of the record was properly refused.—RICHARDS v. BLUCK (1848), 6 C. B. 437; 6 Dow. & L. 325; 18 L. J. C. P. 15; 12 L. T. O. S. 126; 12 Jur. 963; 136 E. R. 1319.

136. ——— Construction—Damages.]—A farming agreement contained the following clause:—"No hay or straw to be sold off the land without consent of the landlord or his agent, except the value of the straw so sold off be returned in manure on the land." A breach of the agreement having been committed, the landlord claimed as damages the selling price of the straw. The tenant contended that he was liable only for the value of the straw if spent in manure. A verdict & judgment having been given for the landlord:—Held: (1) if the tenant sold the hay or straw, he was only bound to spend upon the land as much manure as the straw would have produced (POLLOCK, C.B., & PARKE, B.); (2) the tenant was bound to return in manure the price or market value of the straw (ALDERSON & PLATT, B.B.); (3) the ct. being equally divided, a rule to reduce the damages should be refused.

Whether the word used be "price" or "value," it is the same thing (PLATT, B.).—LOWNDES v. FOUNTAIN (1855), 11 Exch. 487; 25 L. J. Ex. 49; 26 L. T. O. S. 151; 20 J. P. 24; 4 W. R. 152; 156 E. R. 923.

137. Tenant advertising hay for sale—Tenant about to leave.]—An agreement for the tenancy of a farm provided the tenant should consume on the farm all hay, straw, etc., produced on the farm, except that he should be at liberty to remove hay & straw if for every ton of hay or straw so removed he brought & consumed on the farm three tons of manure. About seven months before expiration of the tenancy, the tenant advertised some hay, clover, & straw for sale:—Held: an injunction would not be granted to prevent the sale, as it did not appear there was yet a breach of the agreement or a contemplated breach.—WARWICK v. WILLIAMS (1894), 38 Sol. Jo. 742.

138. To consume hay, straw, etc., on premises during last three years of term—Threat to remove—Breach.]—Pltf. was landlord of the farms held by defts. under a lease, by which they were bound to spend on the premises all hay, straw, & haum arising in the three last years. The supplemental bill charged that defts. threatened to carry away the straw & dung in the last year & to plough up an excessive quantity of the land, & prayed an injunction to restrain them from so doing:—Held: (1) as to the carrying off straw & manure, it was not a case of irremediable injury, which was the only ground of the summary interposition of equity cts., but merely a breach of contract; (2) the ploughing up ancient meadow was, upon the face of it, irreparable waste, but in this case the question was as to the proper quantity of land to be cropped, & only fit for a jury to decide.—JOHNSON v. GOLDSWAIN (1796), 3 Anst. 749; 145 E. R. 1027.

139. Not to sell off or remove produce—Removal in last year of tenancy.]—A tenant, continuing possession by agreement on the terms of a lease, was bound at his removal to "leave upon the land all the dung & manure of the preceding year," the value to be paid by the succeeding tenant, & at no time to "sell or give away any of the hay or straw of the farm, which shall always be spent on the ground." The tenant on going out threatened to sell the straw:—Held: the tenant, under this contract, was not entitled to take away or sell the straw of the last or way-going crop, & the lessor was entitled to have & maintain letters of suspension & interdict. Semble: the tenant was not entitled to have value for such straw.—ROXBURGHE (DUKE) v. ROBERTON (1820), 2 Bli. 156; 4 E. R. 286.

140. ——— Effect of Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908, s. 26—Date of sale.]—The above sect., giving the tenant power to dispose of the produce of his holding, does not apply to the year before the expiration of the tenancy, & where a tenancy agreement prohibits the tenant from selling produce off his holding, he cannot by virtue of anything contained in the sect. sell off during the last year of his tenancy the produce of any previous year.

In a dispute between a landlord & his tenant as to the date upon which the latter sold produce of his holding to a third party:—Held: the material date was the actual date when the contract for sale was made, & not the date when, as between the contracting parties, the contract for sale became enforceable within Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (c. 71), s. 4.—MEGGESON v. GROVES, [1917] 1 Ch. 158; 86 L. J. Ch. 145; 115 L. T. 683; 61 Sol. Jo. 115.

141. ——— Penalty or liquidated damages—Power of re-entry on breach.]—A lease contained a covenant that the tenant should not carry any hay, etc., off the premises on pain to forfeit as & for liquidated damages the sum of £5 per ton sold or carried off, & a clause followed which enumerated all the covenants except the above & provided that upon breach of any of the covenants the lessor might re-enter:—Held: (1) the true construction was that he should not remove any of the hay without paying £5 per load; (2) the penalty of £5 did not prevent the clause of re-entry from applying to the above covenant, the words of the proviso being large enough to comprehend it.—DOE d. ANTROBUS v. JEPSON (1832), 3 B. & Ad. 402; 1 L. J. K. B. 154; 110 E. R. 144.

142. ——— Penalty recoverable as rent.]—A. demised to B. a farm at a certain rent, with a condition that, if any hay were cut & sold off the premises, the tenant should pay a penalty of 2s. 6d. for every yard, to be recovered by distress as for rent:—Held: (1) the sum payable was a penal sum by way of punishment for not spending the produce on the land, to be recovered by distress as if it was rent in arrear, but not being itself rent.—POLLITT (POLLETT) v. FORREST (1848), 11 Q. B. 962; 17 L. J. Q. B. 291; 11 L. T. O. S. 414; 12 Jur. 560; 116 E. R. 732, Ex. Ch.

substantial difference between the manurial value of hay & that of straw :—Held : the sum so made payable was a penalty & not liquidated damages.—WILLSON v. LOVE, [1896] 1 Q. B. 626 ; 65 L. J. Q. B. 474 ; 74 L. T. 580 ; 44 W. R. 450, C. A.

144. Increased rent on breach—Right to sell on payment of increased rent.]—Covenant in a farming lease that the lessee would not sell or carry away from the demised premises any hay, straw or manure which should be grown or produced thereon, without the consent of the lessor first had & obtained, under the increased rent of £10 for every ton so sold or carried away, & so in proportion for any greater or less quantity, but that the lessee would eat & consume the hay & straw by his cattle. Breach that the lessee, without the consent of the lessor, did sell a large quantity of hay & straw grown & produced on the demised premises, to wit, etc. :—Held : the covenant was one covenant, which gave the lessee the right to sell the hay, etc., on payment of the increased rent, & the breach was not well assigned.—LEGH (LEIGH) v. LILLIE (1860), 6 H. & N. 165 ; 30 L. J. Ex. 25 ; 25 J. P. 118 ; 9 W. R. 55 ; 158 E. R. 69.

145. — — — Removal of hay unfit for food.]—Deft. was tenant to pltf. of a farm under a written agreement to pay an additional rent of £10 for every ton, or any less quantity, of "hay, straw, or other dry fodder" of the growth of the premises which should be sold off or taken away, or removed therefrom. At the trial of an action against him to recover damages for an alleged breach of this covenant it was proved that deft. had sold & removed a quantity, something less than a ton, of hay, which he alleged was very bad & utterly unfit to be eaten by cattle. The jury found that the hay so sold was "not fit food for cattle," & thereupon a verdict was entered for pltf. :—Held : the verdict was rightly entered for pltf., for what deft. removed was hay, & came clearly within the covenant, although it was hay of very inferior quality & unfit for food.—FIELDEN v. TATTERSALL (1863), 1 New Rep. 332 ; 7 L. T. 718.

146. — — — Sale after determination of tenancy.]—Deft. had become tenant to pltf. on the terms & stipulations that the rent should be payable half-yearly, that deft. "should not sell any straw, etc., or manure, grown or produced upon the farm, without the written licence" of pltf. under certain penalties, & "that the penalties should be considered as additional rent, & should be recoverable by distress or otherwise as rent." Averments, "in consideration thereof" deft. promised pltf. to pay all such penalties as he might be liable to pay pltf. according to the stipulations, & deft., without licence, sold straw grown on the premises during his tenancy. Breach, non-payment of penalties in respect thereof. Plea, the straw was sold after determination of the tenancy. On special demurrer to the plea :—Held : (1) pltf. entitled to judgment, as the promise to observe the terms, one of which was payment of penalties, was supported by the bygone consideration of having become tenant on those terms, & the stipulation must be construed to be not at any time to sell straw grown during the tenancy (LORD CAMPBELL, C.J., & PATTESON, J.) ; (2) the stipulation should be construed to be not during the tenancy to sell straw, etc., grown during the tenancy (ERLE, J.).—MASSEY v. GOODALL (1851), 17 Q. B. 310 ; 20 L. J. Q. B. 526 ; 17 L. T. O. S. 181 ; 15 Jur. 991 ; 117 E. R. 1298.

S. from year to year, provided that the tenant should consume on the premises all hay & fodder, spread upon the land, all manure & compost produced on the farm, not sell off any hay or fodder, & at the end of the tenancy leave all manure & compost. The farm was sold & conveyed to C., who brought an action to restrain S. from acting in contravention of the above-mentioned provision :—Held : (1) C., as assignee of the reversion, could enforce any covenant in the lease which ran with the reversion ; (2) the covenant as to hay & manure did so run.—CHAPMAN v. SMITH, [1907] 2 Ch. 97 ; 76 L. J. Ch. 394 ; 96 L. T. 662 ; 51 Sol. Jo. 428.

148. Not to sell off or remove in last year of tenancy—Not confined to produce grown during last year.]—A covenant in a farming lease that the lessee "shall not nor will, during the last year of the term, sell or remove from the farm & lands any of the hay, straw & fodder which shall arise & grow on the farm & lands," restricts the tenant from selling or removing any of the hay, straw or fodder, the produce of the farm, which shall happen to be thereon during the last year of the term, & is not confined to such hay, straw, & fodder as has arisen & grown thereon during such last year.—GALE v. BATES (1864), 3 H. & C. 84 ; 4 New Rep. 66 ; 33 L. J. Ex. 235 ; 10 L. T. 304 ; 10 Jur. N. S. 734 ; 12 W. R. 715 ; 159 E. R. 457.

149. To leave unconsumed all hay, etc., at end of tenancy—Injunction to restrain removal.]—Deft. was exor. of his father, who held a farm of pltf., as tenant from year to year, subject to an agreement dated Nov. 30, 1857, requiring a certain course of husbandry, & also requiring the tenant to consume, or at the end of the tenancy leave unconsumed, on the premises all hay, straw, & fodder made thereon. The father having died on Nov. 2, 1865, the son succeeded him in the tenancy, but whether under the custom of the country merely, or upon terms of the agreement of Nov. 30, 1857, was a disputed point. In consequence of a notice to quit given to deft. by pltf., deft.'s tenancy was made to expire on Feb. 2, 1873. Some time in 1872, subsequent to the notice determining his tenancy, deft. removed to some adjoining land, the property of a third party, a large quantity of hay for the purpose (the bill alleged) of defeating pltf.'s rights to it which were to arise on Feb. 2, 1873, & generally to embarrass pltf. in his trial of those rights. Deft. had also exceeded the terms of the agreement in respect of the quantities of land permitted to be on tillage generally, & in wheat tillage in particular. Pltf. prayed an injunction to restrain deft. from breaking up more land, & from sowing more with wheat than was already broken up & sown, & also from disposing of the removed hay, & from removing other hay or any straw or fodder grown on the estate :—Held : the ct. would, for the purpose of the injunction, assume a continuation of the tenancy on the terms of the agreement of Nov. 1857, & the injunction prayed would be granted upon pltf. giving the usual undertaking as to damages, & with the reservation generally of liberty to apply.—CROSSE v. DUCKERS (1873), 27 L. T. 816 ; 21 W. R. 287.

150. For valuation of hay, etc., left on land—Whether variable by parol.]—Where an agreement in writing, relating to an interest in land, contained also stipulations for the mode in which the straw & manure upon the premises was to be valued, & the landlord set up an agreement by parol to vary the mode of valuation :—Held : the agreement was entire, & the mode of valuation could not be validly altered by a subsequent parol agreement between the parties.

There may possibly be (sed qu.) an abandonment of the entire agreement by parol, but, at all events, there can be no such partial abandonment.—

151. — Construction — Meaning of “fair valuation” & “consuming price.”—In an action by an outgoing tenant against his landlord for the value of hay & straw, left on the premises, it appeared that pltf. held subject to the terms of a draft lease, by which it was agreed (inter alia) that all the hay & straw not used for fodder arising from the last year's crop should be left on determination of the tenancy, the tenant being paid at a fair valuation. It appeared in evidence that the words “fair valuation” had been substituted in the draft for the words “consuming price.” An umpire who had valued the hay & straw, neither at a market price nor at a consuming price, but at a fair valuation between outgoing & incoming tenant, was the only witness as to the value. The amount at a “consuming price” had been paid into ct., & a verdict was given for pltf. for the amount of the “fair valuation.” Deft. contended that, according to the terms of the agreement, a “fair valuation” meant a “consuming price.”—Held: without considering the effect of the alteration in the draft, pltf. was entitled to keep his verdict, it being a matter of evidence what was a “fair valuation,” & the only evidence on the subject being that of the umpire. Qu.: whether the ct. could take into consideration the alteration in the terms of the draft lease.—CUMBERLAND v. BOWES (1854), 15 C. B. 348; 24 L. T. O. S. 169; 3 W. R. 138; 3 C. L. R. 149; 139 E. R. 458; sub nom. CUMBERLAND v. GLAMIS (LADY), 24 L. J. C. P. 46; 1 Jur. N. S. 236.

152. For valuation of hay, etc., sold—By outgoing to incoming tenant—Recovery from incoming tenant.—An agreement between an outgoing & an incoming tenant was that the latter should buy the hay, etc., of the former upon the farm, & that the former should allow to the latter the expense of repairing the gates & fences of the farm, & that the value of the hay, etc., & of the repairs, should be settled by third parties. A statement was drawn up by referees, showing the valuation of the hay, & a deduction for the repairs, & a balance due to the outgoing tenant. In the declaration to recover this balance, counts were framed upon a special agreement, & upon a general indebitatus assumpsit:—Held: pltf. failed to prove the special agreement as it was insufficiently set out in the count, but he could recover upon the indebitatus assumpsit for goods sold & delivered.—LEEDS v. BURROWS (1810), 12 East, 1; 104 E. R. 1.

153. — By outgoing tenant to landlord—Recovery from incoming tenant.—Pltf. entered upon the occupation of a farm under a written agreement, by which he agreed, amongst other things, “to pay £5 sterling for every load of fodder, straw, haum, dung, or turnips which should be sold or carried off the premises, & the same sum for every load of hay or wheat straw sold or carried off the premises, for which there should not be two loads of good dung or other manure (at the option of the landlord) to be spent on the premises,” & also “to purchase all the hay, sanfoin, & tares now in the yard, also all the dung & manure now on the premises, also all the straw from the crops now stacked or about to be stacked in the yard, paying a fair price for same, to be ascertained by valuers on both sides.” The landlord engaged, on the tenant's quitting the farm, to purchase all hay, sanfoin, & tares in the yard, the produce of the farm, also all straw from the crops of the previous harvest that might be on the premises, paying a fair price for same, to be ascertained by valuers on both sides. Pltf. claimed from deft., the incoming tenant, the value of the straw. A valuation had been begun, but failed on this point, the valuers not agreeing upon a basis of valuation or upon an umpire:—Held: (1) as the agreement provided only that the outgoing tenant should be paid for the straw on the premises, & not for the dung, the established rule was that he was entitled to be paid for the straw only at a fodder price, viz., one half the market price; (2) the incoming tenant having consumed the straw, pltf. was entitled in the circumstances to maintain an action for it as upon a quantum meruit.—CLARKE v. WESTROPE (1856), 18 C. B. 765; 25 L. J. C. P. 287; 20 J. P. 728; 139 E. R. 1572.

154. Dung —Prima facie to be used on premises.—Dung by the common course of husbandry in all places ought to be used on the premises.—GOUGH v. HOWARD (1801), Peake, Add. Cas. 197.

155. — Removed by tenant—Account.—Demurrer allowed to a bill by a landlord for a specific performance of covenants, contained in a lease which had expired, to repair hedges & mansion-house, & also for an account of loppings & dung, cut or removed, by the tenant; common covenants in husbandry not being of such a specific nature as to be the subject of equitable jurisdiction.—RAYNER v. STONE (1762), 2 Eden, 128; 28 E. R. 845.

156. — Injunction.—Interim injunction, till answer & further order, granted to restrain a tenant from carrying away dung, soil, & compost, or crops sown from seeds sown since Lady Day, the termination of his tenancy, & from ploughing up meadow.—PULTENEY v. SHELTON (1799), 5 Ves. 260, n.; 31 E. R. 576; subsequent proceedings (1799), 5 Ves. 147; 31 E. R. 516.

157. Assignment of manure by tenant—Bad husbandry.—When a tenant has assigned his lease & manure to an incoming tenant, & has made a second assignment of stock & manure to trustees for creditors, & the second assignees take possession first, the second assignees have the right to the manure, for it was assignable by the tenant, though he might thereby subject himself to an action by the landlord for bad husbandry.—BURBAGO v. KING (1813), 2 Chit. 246.

158. To muck & manure—How satisfied.—A covenant by a lessee that he will sufficiently muck & manure the land with two sufficient sets of muck within the space of six of the last years of the term, the last set of muck to be laid upon the premises within three years of expiration of the term, is satisfied by the tenant laying on two sets of muck within the three last years of the term.—POWNALL v. MOORES (1822), 5 B. & Ald. 416; 106 E. R. 1243.

159. To use soil, compost & manure on premises—Meaning of “soil.”—Upon a covenant to use on demised premises all dung, straw, soil, compost, ashes & manure made thereon, a breach was assigned in not using on the premises all dung, straw, soil, compost, ashes & manure made thereon, but on the contrary, thereof, taking away straw, soil, ashes, & manure. Plea, deft. did not take away the straw, compost, ashes, & manure. A verdict being found for pltf. upon the supposed insufficiency of the plea, without the production of evidence, the ct. refused to enter a nonsuit, or direct a new trial, but entered a verdict for deft. upon the breach, with an assessment of damages as to the soil, or generally as to the premises in the breach not covered by the plea.

Soil must mean compost (LORD TENTERDEN, C.J.).

My impression is soil is not compost (BAYLEY, J.).—MARRACH v. ELLIS (1827), 1 Man. & Ry. K. B. 511.

160. To spread & leave manure—Stranger leaving cattle on land & removing dung.—A tenant executed a bond to his landlord, conditioned that it should be void if he should spread all the manure then collected in the midden-stead or on any other part of the farm on the land, & should not sell, cart, or convey away any manure from the farm. The tenant's stock upon the farm having been sold by auction, two cows bought by W. were permitted by the tenant to stay upon the premises for some weeks. W. brought all their food daily from his own farm, & took away the manure made by them:—Held: the condition of the bond was broken, as the manure so taken away was made upon the land, & ought to have been spread upon the land.—HINDLE v. POLLITT (1840), 6 M. & W. 529; 9 L. J. Ex. 288; 151 E. R. 521.

161. To pay for manure on ingoing—Exclusion of custom.—In an action by a landlord against an incoming tenant, the declaration stated that in consideration that pltf. would give up to deft. possession of the farm on which certain manure had been laid, & would permit him to have the benefit of the manure, deft. promised to pay pltf. for same, according to the custom of the country. Breach, non-payment. The custom of the country was for the tenant not only to pay for manure on going in, but to receive payment for it on going out. In support of this contract pltf. put in evidence a written agreement, which stated that the land had been manured with eight loads of manure per acre, & that the tenant agreed to leave the land, when given up by him, in same state, or to allow a valuation to be made:—Held: (1) the written agreement excluded the custom of the country as being inconsistent with it; (2) there was a variance between that agreement & the one stated in the declaration.—CLARKE v. ROYSTONE (1845), 13 M. & W. 752; 14 L. J. Ex. 143; 4 L. T. O. S. 376; 9 J. P. 488; 153 E. R. 315.

of land by tenant's labourers—According to custom of country.—A lease contained a stipulation that, for every acre, & so in proportion for a less quantity of the land which the lessee should suffer to be occupied by any other person without the landlord's consent, an additional rent should be paid. The tenant undertook to use, occupy, dress, & manure the land according to the custom of the country. The tenant, without the landlord's consent, suffered his labourers to use small portions of the land for the purpose of raising a potato crop. It was proved to be the custom of the country for farmers to pursue that course:—Held: the landlord entitled to the additional rent, this being an occupation of the land by other persons.—GREENSLADE v. TAPSCOTT (1834), 1 Cr. M. & R. 55; 4 Tyr. 566; 3 L. J. Ex. 328; 149 E. R. 991.

163. Against assignment—Covenants usual in farming leases—Custom.—A. granted to B. a lease containing a covenant against assignment. A. afterwards agreed to cancel the lease & to grant B. a more beneficial one, “as reward for the great improvement he had made in the estate, & encouragement for general industry.” A. died before executing the second lease, & B. filed a bill for specific performance against his representatives. A compromise was effected for granting a lease for a reduced term, “the lease to contain all covenants usual & ordinary in farming leases.” It was insisted by the tenant that under the compromise there should be no restriction against assignment:—Held: the master, in settling the lease, was to have regard to the original lease & to the custom as to farming leases, if any.—BELL v. BARCHARD (1852), 16 Beav. 8; 21 L. J. Ch. 411; 51 E. R. 678.

164. Against subdivision—Breach—Actual transfer unnecessary.—Where land was leased exclusively for agricultural purposes, with liberty to the lessee to erect the necessary buildings for residence, but not to subdivide in order to sell or lease stands for building:—Held: the lessor was entitled to treat the lease as null & void & eject the assignees thereof, on its being shown that they had advertised the land for sale in acre plots, & had issued plans showing a proposed subdivision into acre plots, the breach of condition being complete without actual transfer of the plots to purchasers.—SHORT v. TURFFONTAIN ESTATES, LTD., [1905] A. C. 584; 71 L. J. P. C. 148; 93 L. T. 57, P. C.

clared under pain of nullity that he should possess the farm with his own stocking, having become insolvent, his stocking was sold by his creditors, & repurchased by his relations for behoof of his eldest son, to whom also the father assigned the lease. The tenant subsequent to his bankruptcy, had found caution for the rent of the next five years. In these circumstances, he was assoltized from a declarator of irritancy of the lease, brought by the landlord on the ground of his not possessing the farm with his own stocking.—STONE-

SANTER* (1861), 10 C. B. N. S. 435; 142 E. R. 521.

166. Sale of farm—Tenant rights to be paid by purchaser—Recovery by vendors from purchaser of drainage expenses due to tenant.]—Where A., B., & C., joint owners in fee of a farm, of which C. was in occupation as tenant, sold it to a purchaser, under an agreement containing a clause that "the tenant rights are to be ascertained by a valuation in the usual manner, & paid for on completion of the purchase," they are entitled to recover from the purchaser, as one of such "tenant rights," two-thirds of the sum expended by C., in drainage of the farm during his occupation, that being the amount which C. would have been entitled to receive from his co-owners, A. & B., on the expiration of his tenancy. Had the tenant not been an owner, the purchaser would have been bound to pay for the whole drainage; but on the other hand, if all the three owners had been occupiers of the farm as well, the purchaser would not be liable for the cost of the drainage, which in such a case ought to be taken as done by the owners qua owners, & not qua occupiers. It is no answer to the claim of plffs. in such case that at the time of the sale the farm was represented to the purchaser to be thoroughly well drained; (1) because, if such an objection were good, it would vary by parol the written agreement; (2) it is not a good objection because it was a reason for recommending the land that it was already well drained, though the drainage had to be paid for. The purchaser should have inquired by whom it was drained.—WARD v. MOSS (1867), 16 L. T. 91.

In the tenth year he brought an action against the landlord for damages suffered in that & the preceding year, in consequence of the failure to burn sufficient heather:—Held: in the circumstances, the tenant could not be assumed by his actings to have waived his claim.

167. Who liable for tenant's outgoing valuation.]

—Defts.' testator, being in possession of an estate, of part of which he was the owner, & another part of which consisted of Crown lands leased to him for a term, expiring on Oct. 10, 1849, contracted with pltf. for the sale to him of the former part, & by agreement demised to him the Crown lands for one year from Sept. 29, 1848. Pltf. agreed he would abide by, perform, & keep the covenants & agreements contained in the Crown lease, & testator agreed that, in case he should be able to obtain a further lease from the Crown for fourteen years, he would grant to pltf. a lease for thirteen years, subject to the same covenants. By a memorandum subsequently signed by pltf., he agreed to take, with others, the Crown lands, "subject to the same rents, covenants, & obligations, in all respects" as were contained & provided for in the leases by which testator held, or should hold, same. Pltf., on taking possession, paid to the outgoing tenants, according to the custom of the country, the amount of the valuation for fallows, etc., as well of the other lands as of the Crown lands. By the terms of the Crown lease, the custom of the country as between landlord & outgoing tenant was excluded, so that testator could not recover against the Crown for fallows, etc. In May, 1849, pltf. requested defts. not to apply for a renewal of the Crown lease, & on Oct. 10, 1849, he gave up possession of the Crown lands. He then claimed from defts. as outgoing tenant to be paid for fallows, etc.:—Held: (1) the custom of the country was not excluded by the clause in which pltf. agreed to abide by, etc., the covenants, etc., contained in the Crown lease; (2) where such a custom existed, there was an implied contract on the part of the landlord that, if there were no incoming tenant, he would pay the outgoing tenant according to the custom. *FAVIELL v. The lease also bore that the farm was let "for the period of nineteen years from & after the term of Martinmas, 1895, which, notwithstanding the date hereof, is declared to be the term of entry hereunder":—Held: the obligation to burn one-twelfth part of the heather annually ran from Martinmas, 1895, & not from the date of the lease in 1902.—*RAMSEY v. After pltf. had been on the place for six months, deft. gave him notice to fulfil his covenants in two weeks, & after the expiry of the two weeks, put pltf. out of possession:—Held: (1) even if deft. wrongfully withheld the use of the horses & implements, the measure of damage would not be the loss of pltf.'s crop, but the cost of supplying the necessary force.—*SHEPHERD v. B. was tenant for life, & under the powers of Settled Land Acts granted the lease, & by its terms it was provided: "the lessor hereby for himself & his assigns covenants with the lessee that he, the lessor, or his assigns, or the succeeding tenants, will at expiration or sooner determination of the term take & pay for the growing crops & manure then upon the demised premises, etc. Provided also in the event of the lessor, or his assigns, at any time or times & from time to time desiring during the term to resume possession of any of the lands (but not the house, garden, building or yards) comprised in this demise for any purpose other than agriculture, it shall be lawful for him & them so to do, upon giving to the lessee his exors., administrators, or assigns, . . . three calendar months' notice in writing of such desire, & thereupon at expiration of such notice the lessor, or his assigns, shall . . . pay to the lessee, his exors., administrators, or assigns, for the growing crops," etc., "& for the unexhausted tillages & dressings, the like amount as he or they would be entitled to upon quitting pursuant to the covenant of the lessor in that behalf before contained." The lessor having died, the owners of the fee simple sold a certain portion of the demised property to a co., subject to the tenancy & to payment of compensation, etc., under the lease. Pltfs. paid rent in respect of this portion to the co., & notice having been given by the co. to pltfs. that they intended to resume possession, it was agreed that the co. should pay pltfs. £50 in respect of the unexhausted improvements. This he failed to do, & the river overflowed the land:—Held: (1) the tenant not entitled to quit the farm, as it was still capable of producing a good crop: (2) the tenant could recover damages for injury to crops, etc., but not for injury to his wife's health, as he came there knowing that the land was liable to floods.—*SCOTT v. 167 i. Who liable for tenant's outgoing valuation—Purchaser.]—The ct. gave effect to a claim of an outgoing tenant against a singular successor of his landlord's, founded on a custom of the country in the district where the lands were situate, though there was nothing but the local practice to point out to the purchaser of the lands the existence of such a claim.—*BELL v. obtain this amount, & they then sued defts. on the covenant by B. in the lease:—Held: defts. were not liable, as the proviso did not imply any obligation on the part of the lessor to pay if the assigns did not, & as the proviso was that one person or another should pay, & the lessor was not the person who exercised the option.

Semle: (1) the co. were not the assigns of the lessor for the purposes of this case; (2) if it were established that the assigns were not going to fulfil the burden upon them, the ct. would not compel the tenant to give up his land.—BATH v. BOWLES (1905), 93 L. T. 801.

172. Landlord's right to set off—Arrears of rent

170 i. Who can claim—Landlord in occupation.]—Where a landlord has himself been in the occupation of, & has prepared, land let to an incoming tenant, the latter is bound to reimburse the former, as he would have been bound to reimburse an outgoing tenant, for the lime, manure, seed & labour beneficially expended by him for the production of the crop which the incoming tenant reaps.—MARSHALL v. WALKER (1869), 7 M. 833.—SCOT.

172 i. Landlord's right to set off—Illiquid claims against outgoing valuation.]—Held*: a liquid claim for the price of stock transferred by valuation to a landlord in terms of a lease could not be compensated by illiquid & disputed claims at the landlord's instance.—MACRAE v. GORDON (1842), 4 D. 1310.—SCOT.

172 ii. — Illiquid claim for damages against outgoing valuation under award.]—In an action by an outgoing tenant for the price of the waygoing crop, which had been ascertained as provided in the lease, in a submission entered into between the parties at its termination, the landlord, who had taken over the crop, admitted the price was due, but set off an illiquid counterclaim for damages for miscropping & failure to upkeep buildings:—Held: the counterclaim was not a relevant defence to a claim for a sum found due to the tenant by decree arbitral.—SUTHERLAND v. ARGUHAUT (1895), 23 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 284.—SCOT.

172 iii. — Arrears of rent against outgoing valuation—Bankruptcy of tenant.]—The trustee on the sequestrated estate of a tenant of a farm on the estate sued for the value of grain & fodder on the farm at the close of the lease & taken by the landlord, who admitted the amount, but claimed the right to set off against it a balance of arrears of rent. The lease was for one year, with the declaration that it should continue thereafter from year to year until either party should bring it to an end by giving one year's notice, & it was provided that, in the event of the bkpcy. of the tenant, the lease should, in the option of the landlord, terminate at the ensuing Martinmas term, when possession should be given up & matters be settled on certain conditions. One of the conditions was: "The tenant shall give over to the landlord or incoming tenant, by valuation of arbiters to be mutually chosen, or their oversman, one half of the waygoing crop . . . the quantity to be fixed on the ground at any time between Lammas &

the period when the crops are fit to be cut. . . . The proprietor or incoming tenant shall also take by similar valuation the whole turnip crop & dung on the farm at the period of removal:—Held: the landlord's claim was not well founded.—HART v. BAIRD (1897), 5 S. L. T. 172.—SCOT.

172 iv. — ]—A lease for nineteen years from Whit-Sunday, 1893, contained a clause providing that the proprietor or incoming tenant should take from the outgoing tenant the sheep stock according to the customary mode of valuation. The tenant took advantage of a mutual break to terminate the lease at Whit-Sunday, 1898. His estates were sequestrated on May 3, 1898, & a trustee was appointed. Thereafter, the trustee & landlord entered into a submission whereby, on the narrative that under the lease the landlord was bound to take over the sheep stock, they nominated arbiters & an oversman to value the sheep stock, & it was valued accordingly:—Held: the trustee having invoked the lease by calling on the landlord to take over the stock, the landlord was entitled to set arrears of rent against the sum brought out by the arbiters.—MCLAREN (JOHN CRAIG'S TRUSTEE) v. MALCOLM (LORD) (1900), 2 F. (Ct. of Sess.) 541.—SCOT.

172 v. — Interest on improvement expenditure against outgoing valuation.]—In an action by an outgoing tenant against his landlord for sums ascertained to be due to pursuer under his lease by arbiters mutually chosen, defender pleaded he was entitled to set off against pursuer's claim a counter-claim for interest on improvement expenditure, etc., under the lease:—Held: as pursuer's right depended on his having implemented his obligations under the lease he was not entitled to decree de plano, & a proof allowed.—LOVIE v. BAIRD'S TRUSTEES (1895), 23 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 1.—SCOT.

s. Landlord's right to deposit soil in grass park for dressing.]—It is competent for the landlord of a grass park let for a year from Whit-Sunday to enter the park, at or about Candlemas thereafter, & deposit soil within it for the purpose of dressing it for the ensuing season, without leave of the tenant, who is not entitled to graze it at that period of the year.—HAMILTON v. CUNINGHAME (1830), 8 Sh. (Ct. of Sess.) 955.—SCOT.

Debtor was tenant from year to year of a farm in Norfolk at £300 a year, payable half-yearly on Apr. 6 & Oct. 11, & at the date when he was adjudged bkpt. he was under notice to quit on the following Oct. 11. The trustee in bkpcy. did not disclaim the tenancy. Upon the expiration of the notice to quit a valuation of growing crops, tillages, etc., was made between the landlord & the trustee as outgoing tenant. Testimony was given that the custom was for the landlord to deduct from or set off against the sum due from him to the outgoing tenant on the valuation any rent in arrear. The balance of arrears of rent far exceeded the amount of the valuation:—Held: (1) the custom was proved; (2) the landlord was not bound to pay the amount of the valuation, but could set it off against the arrears of rent.—Re WILSON, Ex p. HASTINGS (1893), 62 L. J. Q. B. 628; 10 Morr. 219; 5 R. 455.

v. w. Agreement as to termination of tenancy—Growing season over before eviction.]—The lease of land to be used as a market-garden provided that, if the tenant failed to fulfil his covenants, after giving two weeks' notice in writing, the lease should be void, & he covenanted to give up possession. After he had been on the place for six months the landlord gave him notice to fulfil his covenants in two weeks, & after the expiry of the two weeks, put the tenant out of possession:—Held: although the eviction of pltf. was not justified as the growing season was over when the eviction took place, pltf. had shown nothing to entitle him to punitive damages, & action dismissed.—*SHEPHERD v. 174. Agreement as to mode of quitting.]—A tenant, who has merely agreed to manage & quit the premises agreeable to the manner in which same had been managed & quitted by the former tenants, is not bound by the terms upon which they held. He is not liable as on a breach of covenant, if he quits the holding in the condition in which they quitted it, even although that condition was a breach of covenant by the former tenants to the landlord's knowledge.—LIEBENROOD v. VINES (1815), 1 Mer. 15, 719 (App.) ; 35 E. R. 583, 835.

175. Agreement for new term no discharge of claim under original tenancy.]—In an agreement for a lease of a farm, the tenant agreed to convert the arable land into pasture, & the landlord agreed to pay compensation at the end of the tenancy for certain unexhausted improvements under clauses which the ct. construed as including conversion. At the end of the term no claim was made by deft., the original tenant's assignee, but a new agreement for a further term was made, which did not mention the conversion of arable land into pasture :—Held : the conversion must be paid for by the landlord under the first agreement, & the new agreement was no discharge of the tenant's claim.—LANE v. MOEDER (1885), Cab. & El. 548.

176. Construction of agreement — Ejusdem generis.]—A lease contained a covenant by the tenant, a market gardener, to plant nine-tenths of the land demised with standard fruit trees, the landlords covenanting at the expiration of the tenancy to pay according to a valuation for all the standard fruit trees then growing on the premises, & for all bush fruit trees & other crops then growing on the premises. In addition to the fruit trees, the tenant had planted ten million bulbs, & on the expiration of the tenancy he claimed £8,000 in respect of the bulbs :—Held : bulbs were not "other crops then growing on the premises" within the covenant.—Re PULLEN-BURRY & LANCING COLLEGE (PROVOST & FELLOWS) (1915), 138 L. 177. Covenant to leave land fallowed—Not discharged by surrender of lease.]—A. leased land by deed to M. for ten years, M. covenanting at the end of the term to leave 4 acres of the land fallowed & ploughed. There was also a proviso that, if M. mis-liked his bargain, upon a year's warning he might surrender his estate. Afterwards M. surrendered, but did not leave any land fallowed :—Held : the acceptance of the surrender did not dispense with the covenant, otherwise if the proviso had been for the last year of the ten, for then performance would have been impossible if surrender were accepted.—AUSTIN v. MOYLE (1806), Noy, 118 ; 74 E. R. 1083.

178. Custom for payment of tillages by landlord—Good custom.]—A custom for the tenant of a farm in a particular district to provide work & labour, tillage, sowing & all materials for same, in his away-going year, & for the landlord to make him a reasonable compensation for same, is valid in law, notwithstanding the farm is held under a written agreement, provided such agreement does not in express terms exclude the custom.—*SENIOR v. 179. ———.]—A usage for the landlord to pay a sum in compensation to the offgoing tenant for labour & expense bestowed by him in tilling, fallowing, & manuring arable & meadow land, according to the course of good husbandry, the advantage of which labour & expense the tenant could not otherwise reap, is a reasonable usage. Such practice, being a mere usage of the neighbourhood, is not to be considered as a custom, strictly speaking, & need not be immemorial.

The declaration claimed compensation for work, etc., in manuring, tilling, & fallowing divers acres of land, in tilling & sowing other lands with wheat, & in sowing with seeds divers other acres :—Held : this was, in effect, an averment that the lands were arable.

The declaration also averred the manuring of 10 acres of meadow land :—Held : in substance, an averment that part of the land was meadow land.—DALBY v. HIRST (1819), 1 Brod. & Bing. 224 ; 3 Moore, C. P. 536 ; 129 E. R. 708.

The outgoing tenant had held the land for several years after the expiration of the lease without coming to any fresh agreement. The lease contained a covenant by the tenant to spend & consume on the demised premises three parts of the straw arising from them, & to leave the manure there at the end of the term to & for the use of the lessor, he paying the full price for same :—Held : (1) the tenant must be taken to have held

In the year of the waygoing crop the outgoing tenant, on the employment of the incoming tenant, who paid him for so doing, sowed grass seeds on certain portions of the farm, but failed to roll in the grass seeds, whereby their growth was injured :—Held : (1) the outgoing tenant was liable for the damage ; (2) the obligation to harrow & roll imposed no obligation on the outgoing tenant to remove whole stones from the land which would interfere with the beneficial operation of the roller ; (3) by the practice of the district the outgoing tenant was not bound to remove the stones.—MCINTYRE v. ANDERSON (1872), 10 Sc. L. R. 59.—SCOT.

181. Who liable under custom—Landlord.]—The outgoing tenant's remedy for tenant right according to the custom of the country is against the landlord, & not against the incoming tenant, unless by virtue of an agreement between the parties to that effect. The outgoing tenant is entitled to recover the amount of the tenant right from the landlord upon a quantum meruit, & the ascertainment of the amount by a valuation is not a condition precedent to his right to sue when it is not made such by the terms of the lease.—SUCKSMITH v. WILSON (1866), 4 F. & F. 1083.

182. ——— Not incoming tenant—Unless by agreement.]—Primâ facie* the landlord is bound to pay the outgoing tenant for tillages, & the mere fact of the incoming tenant entering upon the land does not render him liable so to do; but it is a question of fact whether the contract between the outgoing tenant & the landlord subsists, or a new contract has been entered into with the incoming tenant.—CODD v. 183. ——— ——— ———.]—Although the ordinary practice (to avoid circuitry) is for the incoming tenant to pay the outgoing tenant on a valuation, yet a custom of the country for the outgoing tenant to look to the incoming tenant only for payment for seeds, acts of husbandry, & tillages, to the exclusion of the landlord's liability, is unreasonable (as imposing on the outgoing tenant a debtor in whose selection he had no choice), uncertain as between a lessee & sub-lessee, & bad in point of law. The landlord is, by custom, liable to the outgoing tenant, & the incoming tenant is not liable to the outgoing tenant, where there is no contract, express or implied, between them. It being admitted that the outgoing tenant was entitled to be paid for seeds, acts of husbandry, tillages, etc.,

182 i. Who liable under custom—Not incoming tenant—Unless by agreement.]—In an action by a landlord against an incoming tenant for the expense of cultivating the summer fallow left upon the farm by the outgoing tenant in terms of his lease, & which had been paid by the landlord to him:—Held: (1) as the lease of the incoming tenant did not contain any obligation on him to pay for the fallow, & as the landlord had not established by sufficient written evidence that a separate obligation had been undertaken by him to that effect, he was not entitled to recover the sum sued for; (2) proof as to the practice of that part of the country was not competent evidence to support the landlord's claim.—ALEXANDER v. Manure & fallow received free of charge by incoming tenant—Outgoing tenant entitled to payment only for surplus left.]—A tenant upon entering on his farm had received free of charge a certain amount of ground in fallow prepared with a certain quantity of manure. At the expiry of his lease he claimed the value of the fallow & manure left by him on the farm. 184. Incoming tenant—Failure of landlord to pay in terms of lease.]—A landlord & tenant entered into an agreement for renting a farm. The landlord covenanted that he or the incoming tenant should pay for the work & seeds of the off-going crop. By the custom of the country the incoming tenant was bound to pay for such labour & seeds, not the landlord. The off-going tenant brought an action on the custom, against the incoming tenant, for compensation:—Held: (1) the incoming tenant was not a party to the agreement that the landlord or he should pay compensation, & the custom prevailed against him; (2) as the landlord had not paid compensation, he was bound to pay a reasonable sum of money for the work & seeds, of which he had taken the benefit.—LOUTH v. ENDERBY (1824), 3 L. J. O. S. K. B. 23.

185. Implied contract to pay—Receiver.]—In an action for tillages or tenant-rights by an outgoing tenant, it was proved that pltf. held the farm under a lease containing an agreement for such tillages, granted by deft.'s brother, a receiver of the estate under the Ch. Ct., the legal estate being in trustees; that deft., upon the death of his brother in 1841, was appointed receiver, & continued to receive the rent from pltf. till 1843, in which year he gave notice to quit "the land & premises which you hold under me"; that upon pltf. quitting, he claimed a sum of money for his tenant-right, & deft. then offered £15, which was refused:—Held: sufficient evidence from which the jury might infer a contract by deft. to pay pltf. for his tillages or tenant-rights.—MILLIS v. d. Agreement for payment for labouring "fallow break."]—An agricultural lease provided that during the last year thereof the tenant should "be paid for labouring & manuring the fallow break according to the valuation to be fixed by arbn., as well as for the value of the land left in bare fallow according to the average rent of the farm":—Held: "fallow break" did not include land from which the tenant had taken a waygoing green crop.

"Fallow" means land left without crop. To suppose that under the term "fallow" is included land left in green crop is to confound altogether the meaning of the word (LORD BENHOLME).—THOMSON v. JAMIESON (1874), 1 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 895.—SCOT.

187. In unsigned lease—Consistent with tenancy from year to year.]—An agreement that an outgoing tenant shall be paid for tillages on expiration of his tenancy is not inconsistent with the terms of a tenancy from year to year.

Pltf., a small farmer, had entered into an agreement with deft. for a lease for a term of three, five, or seven years, & a lease in pursuance of the agreement had been drawn up. It was never signed. Amongst other covenants, it contained one whereby deft. covenanted to pay for the tillages done by pltf. in the season previous to expiration of his tenancy. Pltf. entered into possession on Mar. 25, 1862, & quitted, in consequence of his landlord's notice, on Mar. 28, 1864. Previous to giving up possession he completed the tillages for the year's crops, & deft. having refused him payment for them, he brought an action:—Held: where a tenant entered on possession of premises in pursuance of an unsigned agreement for a lease, he became a yearly tenant upon such of the terms in the unsigned agreement as were not inconsistent with such a tenancy.—BROCKLINGTON v. SAUNDERS (1864), 13 W. R. 46.

188. — Effect of earlier determination of lease.]—A farm was taken for fourteen years, & the tenant had to pay a given sum for tillages & improvements done before he entered, & to receive the value of the tillages & improvements which he should leave on the farm, according to a valuation to be made at his quitting. The tenant in the first year of the tenancy said he would leave, & his landlord said he might; but no new bargain was made as to his tillages & improvements:—Held: he was not entitled to the value of the tillages & improvements which he left on so quitting.—WHITTAKER v. BARKER (1832), 1 Cr. & M. 113; 3 Tyr. 135; 149 E. R. 336.

189. — Effect of abandonment of lease.]—A tenant of a farm from year to year, entitled to certain tenant rights, took a lease of the farm for seven years, under which he became entitled to larger tenant rights & allowances. In the middle of the term, being unable to pay the rent & continue the tenancy, he left the farm, & in effect, abandoned the position of tenant, & did not bring an ejectment against his landlord, who was in possession under a distress for rent, & who remained, at the tenant's request, in possession after the distress was satisfied. No new agreement was made as to the tenant rights & allowances:—Held: (1) in the absence of any new agreement, the tenant's rights arose only at expiration of the lease & on a substantial performance by the tenant of the covenants thereof, & as the tenant had in effect abandoned the tenancy, he was not entitled to any tenant rights under the lease; (2) any tenant right he might have had previously while tenant from year to year was extinguished by his accepting the tenant rights under the lease.—ENGLAND v. SHEARBURN (1884), 52 L. T. 22; 49 J. P. 86.

190. Assignment of stock, etc.—Right to payment for tillages included.]—An outgoing tenant, administratrix of the late tenant, having (after having had the farm for above a year) assigned to an incoming tenant, in consideration of a debt due to him, all her goods & effects, & all stock, corn, grain, etc., on the farm, & all her estate & interest thereon & therein:—Held: the words "all her estate & interest" comprised the tenant right.—CARY v. CARY (1862), 10 W. R. 669.

191. Agreement between incoming & outgoing tenant—Consent of landlord thereto—Landlord's rights not prejudiced.]—Pltf. was tenant of a farm, with a right to the use of a certain part of the premises without payment until Mar. 25 next after the expiration of the term, "for threshing & spending the last year's crop," & by the custom of the country he was entitled, at the expiration of the term, to be paid by the landlord or the incoming tenant for certain tillages. He gave up the farm to deft. as incoming tenant, at Michaelmas, 1870, & before so doing valuers were mutually appointed to value the tillages as between them with the consent of the landlord, & the valuers duly made & signed their valuation. After deft. had entered into possession, but before Mar. 25, 1871, the landlord gave him notice that rent was due from pltf. & required him to pay the amount of the valuation, which was less than the rent due, to him, the landlord, & not to pltf., & this deft. did on receiving an indemnity from the landlord, but without pltf.'s consent. Pltf. having sued deft. for the value of the tillages, was nonsuited:—Held: the nonsuit was right, for the contract to be implied between the incoming & outgoing tenant was subject to the right of the landlord to be paid the arrears of rent out of the valuation.

Pltf., on quitting the farm at Michaelmas, 1870, gave up to deft., & deft. exercised, the right which pltf. had under the lease of converting the straw on the farm (between Michaelmas, 1870, & Mar. 25, 1871) into manure with his cattle. In so converting it the cattle ate a certain portion of the straw, calculated to be one-third of the bulk, which the valuers valued as browse at £33:—Held: pltf. was entitled to recover this sum from deft.—STAFFORD v. GARDNER (1872), L. R. 7 C. P. 242; 25 L. T. 876; 36 J. P. 566; 20 W. R. 299.

191 i. Agreement between incoming & outgoing tenant—Specified quantity of land to be left in grass—What land included.]—By an agreement between an outgoing & an incoming tenant of a farm, the former bound himself to leave in grass certain parks consisting altogether of about 97 acres. In an action by the incoming tenant for damages arising from a deficiency in the quantity of grass, the defence was that the parks, though not containing 97 acres, had been left in grass & that at all events there were 97 acres of grass on the farm:—Held: the outgoing tenant, though not in perfect good faith, was entitled to take into account the whole grass on the farm, making, however, allowance for the inferiority in quality of any grass not in the parks, but natural grass land not in use to be ploughed was not to be included.—SIMPSON v. CREIGHTON (1832), 2 Sh. & D. 405.—SCOT.

e. Claim by outgoing tenant for fallow—Set off by incoming tenant for overcropping.]—An outgoing tenant claimed a sum as the value of fallow ground left by him. Contesting this claim, the incoming tenant insisted for damages for overcropping. After several reports from agricultural experts, in one of which the claim for fallow was sanctioned on the ground that the tenant was entitled to take another crop instead of leaving in fallow, while the others negatived the averment of a special usage, the Lord Ordinary decreed for the value of the fallow in favour of pltf., who was the outgoing tenant, & the et. adhered.—PURVES v. RUTHERFORD (1822), 2 Sh. (Ct. of Sess.) 59.—SCOT.

193. — Application to tenancy from year to year—Holding over—Exclusion of custom.]—The custom of the country could have no place where the outgoing tenant held under a lease expressly making a different provision in respect of the way-going crop, or where he continued to hold over after expiration of such a lease without coming to any fresh agreement with his landlord, by which he must be taken to hold under the same terms.—BORASTON v. 194. — .]—A tenant holding over after expiration of a lease for years may be taken to hold upon any of the terms of such former lease which are consistent with a yearly tenancy. Whether he does hold on any of such terms or not is a question for the jury on the facts proved. A covenant in a lease for years ending at Michaelmas, that the tenant shall & may retain & sow 40 acres of wheat on the arable land demised (consisting of 213 acres) at the seed-time next after the end of the term, & having the standing thereof till the harvest then next following, rent free, with use of premises for threshing, etc., till a day named, is a term which may be made incident to a tenancy from year to year.—HYATT v. 195. — Subject to specified deductions—Landlord's right to customary deductions not excluded.]—The following proviso was in a lease made between a landlord & tenants: "Provided, lastly, that on determination of his tenancy the tenant shall, in the event of his having duly performed the several stipulations & agreements herein contained & to be performed on his part, be entitled to have & take a following or way-going crop of corn not exceeding one-third of the arable land hereby demised, such crop to be taken from land summer-fallowed or from which turnips or rape have been eaten, or from land sown in the regular course with seeds & depastured by sheep, & which way-going crop shall be taken at a valuation to be ascertained by two disinterested persons, one to be named by the oncoming, the other by the outgoing, tenant, or their umpire (in case they cannot agree), such umpire to be appointed by such valuers before proceeding upon such valuation, & the decision of such two arbitrators or of their umpire shall be final & binding on both parties. It is further agreed half of the value of such way-going crop shall be paid at Christmas next after the determination of this demise, the remaining half at Lady Day following, subject to such deductions as the same may be liable to under any of the covenants & agreements herein contained on the part of the tenant, which the landlord is hereby authorised to deduct, & also subject to such of the rents herein reserved as shall be due & owing, to payment of which it shall be primarily liable, & for which rents the landlord shall be entitled at any time to distrain the same way-going crop before or after severance as for rent in arrear." There were no provisions as to the mode of ascertaining the value of such crop. By the custom of the country, when applicable, deductions were to be made (1) in respect of the rateable proportion of the rent payable in respect of the land upon which the way-going crop had been grown, this being called "standage"; (2) in respect of the rateable proportion of rates & taxes payable in respect of this land; & (3) in respect of the expenses of reaping, threshing, stacking, & delivering the way-going crops. Disputes arose between the outgoing tenants & the landlord & incoming tenant as to what was meant by a way-going crop of corn, & as to what deductions should be made from its value. The umpire found that the outgoing tenant was entitled to the grain of the way-going crop & also to the straw at manurial value; & he stated his award in the form of a special case. The question before the ct. turned upon whether the rights of the way-going tenant were subject to the custom, & on his behalf it was contended that the application of the custom was displaced by the above provisions of the lease:—Held: the provisions in the lease were wholly independent of the custom, being stipulations for the landlord, giving him in certain cases a right of lien upon the amount of the valuation of the way-going crop, & having no connection with such deductions as were to be made by custom from the value of the crop.—Re CONSTABLE & CRANSWICK (1899), 80 L. T. 164; 43 Sol. Jo. 208.

196. — & leave "turnip or fallow breaks" ploughed—Right to way-going black crop.]—In a lease of a farm of 600 acres the tenant bound himself by a covenant never to have more than one half of the arable land in white crop during the same season, nor to take two white crops off same field without a green or black crop intervening, & to take only one black crop, i.e., beans, peas, potatoes, etc., between grass & grass, & further at the end of the lease to leave the turnip or fallow breaks once ploughed for the incoming tenant:—Held: the words "turnip or fallow breaks" meant the land which would, in the natural course of good was stipulated to be Whit-Sunday, having, under a permission in his lease, brought it into cultivation during the currency:—Held: under the lease he had no right to a way-going crop.—BLAIR v. LYALL (1826), 4 Sh. (Ct. of Sess.) 365; 1 Sc. R. R. 767.—SCOT.

h. Lease with entry at Whit-Sunday—Right to way-going crop.]—A farm was held by deft. by a lease, having the entry at Whit-Sunday, 1802:—Held: deft. not entitled to the way-going crop, i.e., to reap the crop which was prepared & sown in the autumn or spring preceding Whit-Sunday, 1802.—

l. Agreement that at sale of estate tenant should receive full year's rent—Right to way-going crop where agreement silent.]—A tenant entered into a lease of a farm at Whit Sunday, 1791, without any right to a grain crop at his entry. A clause in his lease provided that, if the estate was sold, there was to be a liberty of break in the lease after seven years, if the purchaser wished to enter & take possession, upon which event the tenant was to receive a full year's rent on leaving the farm for defraying the expense of sowing out the lands that year in tillage with grass seed & clover, & in consideration of leaving the whole lands in grass & removing at Whit-Sunday. Nothing was said about a way-going grain crop:—Held: the tenant not entitled to a way-going crop.—MACMICHAEL v. HUTCHESON (1801), 4 Pat. App. 170, H. L.—SCOT.

197. — Sale of crop & earlier entry given to incoming tenant—Ineffectual to discharge outgoing tenant's liability for rent.]—A tenant of a farm, whose tenancy expired at Lady Day, 1801, was entitled to the way-going crop of the harvest, 1801, after his term expired, & paid rent up to Lady Day, 1800. In June, 1800, he agreed to let in the new tenant, sold to him the standing crops, & took a receipt for the value, & also for £20, "for the right of cropping the lands from June 18." The landlord distrained for the rent due till Lady Day, 1801. The new tenant paid this rent, & brought an action to recover it from the outgoing tenant, who had paid tithes & poor rate for 1801. Deft. having recovered a verdict:—Held: there must be a new trial, as by the terms of the written document of sale nothing was to be recouped by way of rent or otherwise, & the outgoing tenant must pay the rent for the time from Lady Day, 1800, to Lady Day, 1801.—*PETRIE v. This lease contained a covenant by the lessee not to assign, & a covenant by the landlord to pay a valuation for the crops at expiration of the tenancy. After expiration of this tenancy, E. continued in possession for several years as tenant from year to year. Deft. gave E. notice to quit. E., before expiration of the tenancy, assigned to pltf.

The lease was for fifteen years from Whit-Sunday, 1846, & therefore expired at Whit-Sunday, & separation of the crop, 1861. In Mar. of that year the tenant, for the first time, took a crop off a field of old pasture. In an action by the landlord against the tenant for payment of this crop, & alternatively for damages for miscropping:—Held: (1) the crop belonged to the tenant, although he had already fifteen crops of grass off the field; (2) the statements were not relevant to support the conclusion for damages.—HAIRD v. HARPER (1865), 3 M. 543.—SCOT.

t. Basis of valuation—Valuation "to be made on such fair terms as parties can agree."]—An obligation on the part of an incoming tenant to take an outgoing tenant's crop at a valuation, "to be made on such fair terms as the parties can agree," cannot be construed to mean that the valuation must be made according to the usage of the country in similar bargains.—*STILL'S TRUSTEES v. u. — Agreement for valuation by arbitration—Submission as to method of determination altered by landlord.]—A tenant was bound by his lease to make over to the landlord or incoming tenant the whole corn & fodder of the last year's crop, as well as the turnips & potatoes on the farm, the last year of the lease, the value of the fodder, turnips & potatoes to be determined by arbiters. At the expiry of the lease the landlord insisted on a clause being inserted in the submission, to the effect that the fodder, turnips & potatoes should be valued at their value for consumption on the farm. To this the tenant objected as beyond the stipulation in the lease whereupon the landlord presented a note of suspension & interdict to prevent the tenant from removing the crop:—Held: the ct. could not interfere beforehand to determine the principle of valuation to be applied by the arbiters, & the tenant was entitled to have the submission expressed in terms of the lease.—*LINDSAY (TRUSTEE) v. 201. — Not affected by stipulations confined to period of holding.]—A tenant held a farm under a lease, containing a condition that the wheat land should be summer-fallowed & well manured for the crop, but no stipulation as to the terms of quitting. By the custom of the country, a tenant who had sown his land with wheat after a crop of turnips at the wheat seedness next before expiration of his tenancy was entitled to cut & carry away one-half of the wheat so sown:—Held: (1) as the condition in the lease was confined to the period of holding the farm, & not to the time of quitting, there was nothing in it directly at variance with the turnips during the last year of his lease, & for these he was to be paid by the proprietor or incoming tenant the value as fixed by arbn.:—Held: he was entitled to the full value of the turnips, viz., (1) their value to the tenant as feeding for the stock; (2) their value to the land through the dung made by the stock fed on them.—SCOTT v. RITCHIE (1869), 7 Sc. L. R. 135.—SCOT.

w. — Parol agreement to deviate from prescribed rotation.]—A lease prescribed a six shift rotation of crop, under which at the end of the lease three-sixths of the farm would have been in grass, one-sixth first year's grass, the other second & third year's grass. The lease provided that at the expiry of the lease the tenant should get payment from the landlord of the first & second years' grass. During the currency of the lease the landlord & tenant verbally agreed that the farm should be cultivated under a five shift rotation, under which, at the expiry of the lease, two-fifths of the farm were in grass, one-fifth first & second year's grass respectively:—Held: the parties, in agreeing to substitute a five shift for a six shift rotation, had agreed by implication that the provisions of the lease regarding payment for grass at the expiry of the lease should be superseded in favour of the rule applicable to a five shift rotation, & the tenant was not entitled to payment for the second year's grass.—TAYLOR v. DUFF (1869), 7 M. 351.—SCOT.

x. — Agreement to pay for turnips "at valuation."]—An incoming tenant was taken bound "to pay the outgoing tenant for turnips & dung at a valuation," & "to leave turnips & dung at the end of his lease to be paid for in like manner by the next succeeding tenant." At the expiry of his lease a dispute arose as to whether the turnips were to be valued at what they were worth for removal from the farm, or for what they were worth for consumption on the farm:—Held: they were to be valued at their market value, being what the outgoing tenant would have realised for them had he not been bound to leave them on the farm.—CRABB (ERSKINE'S TRUSTEES) v. CROMBIE (1870), 9 M. 54; 9 Sc. R. R. 179.—SCOT.

y. Lease of orchard—Fruit of first year's crop not received by tenant—Right to way-going crop.]—F. held a lease of a farm from B. (whose factor, etc., was T.) for nineteen years from Whitsuntide & Martinmas, 1797. Among the subjects let were orchards, & from these F. was to remove at Whitsuntide, 1816, but not from the arable lands until the ensuing Michaelmas. Nearly five years after a settlement with F. & his removal from the farm a claim was made upon him by T. for the value of the fruit for the year 1816. F. had not got the fruit of the orchard crop, 1797, & thus only had the number of crops (nineteen) stipulated for by the lease. Evidence was also produced that a person authorised by T. had been paid by F. for the crop of 1816. The ct. assailed F. with expenses.—THOMSON v. FORRESTER (1830), 4 Wils. & S. 136.—SCOT.

z. Agreement that tenant should have "accommodation" for thrashing last crop.]—It was agreed between landlord & an outgoing tenant that, after the removal of the latter, he should have the privilege of accommodation for thrashing the last crop up to the first day of May ensuing, on condition that the landlord or incoming tenant's servants & horses should be allowed accommodation by him during the time that they were working the fallow break:—Held: the stipulated accommodation included only the use of the mill, & the tenant was not entitled to accommodation for horses for the purpose of conveying the crop to & from the mill.—TWEEDDALE (MARQUIS) v. HUMIE (1848), 10 D. 1053.—SCOT.

a. Tenant allowed to leave land in fall crop.]—A lease contained the words, "also to allow the tenants the right of leaving in fall crop the same quantity of land as is now in fall crop when they get possession," coupled with the fact that there was then a fall crop on part of the land, which had been sown by the preceding tenant & which he was entitled to reap:—Held: the tenants had the right to sow a crop during the tenancy, which they might reap afterwards.—CAMPBELL v. BUCHANAN (1858), 7 C. P. 179.—CAN.

b. Obligation to sell on intimation—Verbal intimation sufficient.]—An outgoing tenant was bound by his lease to sell the one half or the whole of the outgoing crop to the landlord or incoming tenant, on intimation being made to the outgoing tenant at least six months before expiry of the lease:—Held: such intimation need not be in writing, but might be made verbally & be proved by parol.—DUKE v. FERGUSON (1862), 24 D. 547.—SCOT.

c. Agreement that tenant should have right to "corns"—Green crops not included—Landlord's right to fallow not excluded.]—A lease entered into at a time when green crops were not grown in the district gave the tenant a right to the "corns" on the farm in the year of removal:—Held: this did not include green crop, & the tenant was not entitled, by growing green crop in his last year on ground which the lease contemplated should be fallow, to plead that the landlord could get no fallow, the whole land being under "corns."—MILN v. DALHOUSIE (EARL) (1869), 6 Sc. L. R. 689.—SCOT.

d. Hay cut more than year after sowing—Whether landlord or outgoing tenant entitled.]—Hay produced from grass seed, sown with white crop in spring, 1814, & cut in summer, 1815:—Held: to belong to the landlord, & not to the representatives of the deceased life-rent tenant, who died in June, 1815.—TWEEDDALE v. SOMNER (1816), 19 F. C. 213.—SCOT.

e. Land prepared for hay by fallow or green crop—Right to reap.]—Arable lands were leased to a tenant for the full & complete space of nineteen years, & crops from & after the tenant's entry thereto, "which is hereby declared to have been at Whit-Sunday last, 1808, as to the houses, yards, grass, & fallow ground, & to the other arable land now under crop at the separation of same from the ground":—Held: (1) land being uniformly prepared for hay by a fallow or a green crop during the preceding year, both of which were laborious & expensive operations, there was every reason for allowing the tenant to reap both as way-going crops; (2) the landlord entitled to be indemnified of the loss he sustained by not receiving possession of 20 acres of one-year-old grass at the Whit-Sunday of the tenant's removal, there not being two-year-old grass upon the farm.—LYALL v. COOPER (1832), 11 Sh. & D. 96.—SCOT.

f. Incoming tenant's right to way-going crop—Life-rent tenant not entitled to crop of year of entry.]—Under a lease for a life-rent three, nineteen, or fifty-seven years thereafter with entry & removal at Whit-Sunday:—Held: as under the lease the life-rent tenant was not entitled to the crop of the year of entry, his successor in the lease was entitled to a way-going crop in the year of removal.—HARVEY v. KING'S COLLEGE OF ABERDEEN (1845), 8 D. 151; 4 Sc. R. R. 420.—SCOT.

g. New lease granted during currency of old lease—Condition of farm in first year of new lease.]—Where, during the currency of a lease, a new lease is entered into, the condition of the farm in the first year of the new lease affords no presumption as to the way-going crop to which the tenant is entitled at the end of the renewed lease.—HUNTER v. MILLER (1862), 24 D. 1011.—SCOT.

h. Method of cultivation left to tenant's discretion—Right to alter method in last year.]—A tenant in an agricultural lease, which permitted, but did not require, a six shift rotation, & which contained an obligation to observe the rules of good husbandry practised in the country, followed a four or a five shift rotation till the last year of the lease:—Held: he was entitled in the last year of the lease to adopt the six shift rotation, to the effect of taking a way-going crop, which, as regarded a portion of the lands, the mode of cultivation he had previously pursued would not have given him, this being within the fair construction of the lease, & it being made out, on the report of a man of skill, that the proposed way-going crop was not contrary to the rules of good husbandry as established in the district.—HUNTER v. MILLER (1863), 1 M. 29; 4 Macq. 560.—SCOT.

k. Threshing way-going crop.]—A party who had been ordained to remove from a farm within three weeks:—Held: allowed a reasonable period & accommodation to thresh out his grain & dispose of his cattle.—FINLAYSON v. PEDIE (1829), 7 Sh. (Ct. of Sess.) 617.—SCOT.

l. — Right to use threshing-mill & barn.]—Held: (1) the tenant of an agricultural farm under a lease expiring at Whit-Sunday as to houses & grass, & at the separation of the way-going crop as to the arable land, was not at common law entitled to retain a threshing-mill in the farm-stead after Whit-Sunday in order to thresh the way-going crop, nor to the use of a barn & stackyard for the purpose of storing same; (2) tenant entitled to contend that local custom had modified the strictness of the general rule of law, but proof of the custom failed.—GATHERER v. CUMMING'S EXECUTORS (1870), 8 M. 379; 8 Sc. R. R. 498.—SCOT.

m. Outgoing tenant to sell crop to incoming tenant at valuation—Crop left on ground.]—A lease of a farm bound the tenant "never to sell or remove off the lands any straw produced thereon, but to consume the whole thereon for their melioration." He was further bound to sell, if required, to the proprietor or the incoming tenant the last white crop, to be reaped under the lease, etc., at a valuation, but, if this were not insisted on, "then the tenant & his forefathers shall be entitled to dispose of same, inclusive of straw, as he pleases":—Held: he was entitled to the value of the straw at a valuation from an incoming tenant, who had elected to take the crop left on the ground.—NIVISON v. HOWAT (1883), 11 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 182.—SCOT.

custom, giving him a right to a proportion of the wheat sown by him after turnips, & the tenant was entitled to the benefit of the custom, leaving the landlord to his remedy for breach of covenant; (2) the incoming tenant had no right to seize a waggon of the offgoing tenant, who entered on the land so sown after turnips, after expiration of his tenancy, for the purpose of taking away a moiety of a crop of wheat.—HOLDING v. PIGOTT (1831), 7 Bing. 465; 5 Moo. & P. 427; 9 L. J. O. S. C. P. 125; 131 E. R. 180.

202. — Excluded by termination at unusual date.]—A tenant, whose tenancy is determined after Lady Day by an agreement which is silent as to way-going crops, is not entitled to such crops under a custom which gives to the tenant such crops upon a regular expiration of a Lady Day tenancy.—THORPE v. EYRE (1834), 1 Ad. & El. 926; 3 Nev. & M. K. B. 214; 110 E. R. 1462.

203. — Of specified portion—Landlord's right to crop on excess.]—Pltf. in trover for wheat was the offgoing, & deft. the incoming, tenant of a farm, of which pltf.'s tenancy had expired at the Lady Day before the taking of the wheat. By the custom of the country an offgoing tenant was entitled to crop one-third of the arable land of the farm with wheat, & to take, cut, & carry away that wheat after the tenancy had expired, this being called the odd mark. Pltf. had sowed 3 acres more than his proper odd mark by permission of the landlord, & after the wheat had been cut by pltf. deft. carried away the wheat in question :—Held : (1) a parol permission by the landlord to the outgoing tenant to sow more than his strict odd mark was good as against the landlord himself, & as against the incoming tenant; (2) pltf. was entitled to recover.—GRIFFITHS v. TOMBS (1833), 7 C. & P. 810.

204. — — — — — Tenant's lien for seed.]—When the tenancy of a farm expires, the tenant must give up possession of the whole of it to the landlord, crops & everything else, unless there be a custom of the country for the tenant to hold over any part, or to take any of the crops; & the proof of the custom lies on the tenant.

If the custom of the country be for an outgoing tenant, for what is called his odd mark, to crop one-third of the arable in wheat, & to reap that wheat after the tenancy has expired, & the tenant so crop more than the proper one-third, the landlord will be entitled to have all which was last sown, & which is above one-third, unless it be shown that the tenant has a lien upon it for the sowing & the seed.—CALDECOTT v. SMYTHIES (1837), 7 C. & P. 808.

205. — Fences repaired by tenant—Right to possession till land cleared.]—Where it appeared that, by the custom of the country as between outgoing & incoming farm tenants, the former was entitled to a way-going share of the crop of wheat sown by him in the last year of his tenancy; that he cut the whole of such crop, & kept the fences of the field in repair until the whole crop was cut & carried away :—Held : (1) in such circumstances the outgoing tenant had the possession in law of the field until the crop was carried away; (2) his vendee of his share of the crop had a good defence, under the plea of not possessed, to an action by the new tenant for breaking & entering the close in which the crop grew, for the purpose of carrying away his share.

The only question seems to be, whether the possession of the outgoing tenant, which it is admitted continues until the crop is reaped, does not continue also until it is carried away. If his possession continues until the crop is cut, it seems to follow that it must continue also until he has done all which he has a right to do (POLLOCK, C.B.).

206. Custom that outgoing tenant should store crop in barn—Good custom.]—Lands were demised for one year, & so from year to year. In such a case a custom that a tenant may leave his way-going crop in the barn, etc., of the farm for a certain time after the lease is expired & he has quitted the premises is good; & as by tacit consent the contract between the parties continued beyond the time for which they originally contracted, all the rights belonging to the original contract must also be continued, & the landlord may distrain the corn so left for rent arrear after six months have expired from determination of the original term, notwithstanding Landlord & Tenant Act, 1709 (c. 18), ss. 6, 7.—BEAVAN v. DELAHAY (1788), 1 Hy. Bl. 5; 126 E. R. 3.

207. — Injunction from carrying away crop—Distress by landlord.]—By agreement, as well as by custom of the country, a tenant was to have the use of the barns & gate-rooms to thrash out his corn & fodder his cattle till the May-day after the expiration of his term; his term expired at Michaelmas, 1824; he was then restrained by injunction from carrying off the premises corn in the straw; in Jan., 1825, his landlord distrained a rick of corn on the premises :—Held : the distress was valid.—KNIGHT v. BENETT (1826), 3 Bing. 364; 11 Moore, C. P. 227; 4 L. J. O. S. C. P. 95; 130 E. R. 553.

208. Remedy of incoming tenant—Removal of crop by outgoing tenant—Holding over.]—Trover does not lie by an incoming tenant to recover the value of the way-going crops taken by the offgoing tenant, who continued to hold the land as tenant from year to year after expiration of an old lease, which reserved to him the right after the end of the term at Lady Day "to fence in & preserve all such hard corn as should be sown on the premises the winter seedness preceding, so as the same exceeded not 29 acres, & was summer fallowed & well manured, etc., & at harvest to reap & carry away same," for neither is trover the proper action to try a question as to the right to the land, nor does the proper remedy for mismanagement of the land when the tenant did not summer fallow, etc., during the former term appertain to the incoming tenant, but to the landlord. The incoming tenant might maintain an action against the offgoing tenant for breach of the custom of husbandry in the place, in not leaving one-third of the way-going crop of wheat sown upon a clover brush; yet the custom of the country could have no place where the offgoing tenant held under a lease expressly making a different provision in respect of the way-going crop, or where he continued to hold over after expiration of such a lease without coming to any fresh agreement with his landlord, by which he must be taken to hold under the same terms.—BORASTON v. GREEN (1812), 16 East, 71; 104 E. R. 1016.

that time, it being admitted that he had no right to a way-going crop.—DAVIS v. CONNOP (1814), 1 Price, 53; 145 E. R. 1328.

210. Remedy of outgoing tenant—Damages.]—In an action of trespass quare clausum fregit, it was proved that deft. had let his land to pltf. under terms reduced into writing. One stipulation was that pltf. should have a right to take two-thirds of the corn sown & left by him growing on the land at his leaving it at Lady Day, the custom of the country being that he should have the whole. It was also proved that deft. had refused to let pltf. cut the corn, but had turned his labourers off the land, & cut & carried all into his own barns. The value of the corn was proved to be about £285. Other trifling trespasses were charged in the declaration, to the whole of which deft. had pleaded the general issue. The jury found a verdict for pltf., with £315 damages:—Held: the excess was not so large as not to be covered by the circumstances of the trespass as proved, & it was certainly no ground for disturbing the verdict, the jury being entitled to take into consideration, independently of the trifling damages not attempted to be justified, & for which the judge had directed nominal damages to be found, the nature of the case, & were not bound to a minute calculation of value. Semble: it would have been otherwise if the damages had been very excessive. Qu.: as to the effect of the agreement, which was for one year only, as evidence of the terms on which pltf. continued to hold the land after expiration of the year, & as to the necessary directions to be given to the jury on such evidence.—COX v. DUGDALE (1823), 12 Price, 708; 147 E. R. 853.

211. Arbitration—Arbitrators making award without notice to parties & without evidence—Custom.]—A usage for arbitrations appointed to determine, as between outgoing & incoming tenants of a farm, the value of the way-going crop & the deductions for want of repairs of the farm buildings & fences, to make their award, on inspection of the crops & premises, without notice to the parties & without evidence, may be good; but no usage can justify the arbitrators in hearing one party & his witnesses only, in the absence of & without notice to the other party.—*OSWALD v. 210 i. Remedy of outgoing tenant—Trover.]—By a lease from D. to pltf. it was provided that if D. sold the farm pltf. should give up possession upon receiving six months' notice before Apr. 1, & that he should have the privilege of harvesting & threshing the crops of the summer fallow, or the work done on the fallow should be paid for at a reasonable valuation. D. afterwards sold to deft., & pltf. received notice after he had prepared the summer fallow, but before he had sown it. He afterwards sowed it with fall wheat, & gave up possession on Apr. 1. Neither D. nor deft. elected to pay for the crop, & deft. converted it to his own use:—Held: pltf. had never parted with the property in the crop, & entitled to recover in trover against deft.—HARRISON v. PINKNEY (1881), 6 A. R. 225.—CAN.

211 i. Arbitration—By two arbitrators & oversman in case of difference—One award.]—A lease of a farm provided that the crop, etc., if taken by the incoming tenant, should be valued by two men mutually chosen & by an oversman to be named by them, should they differ in opinion. The arbitrators, two farmers, differed on some points & appointed as oversman a third farmer, who issued his award, containing the agreed findings of the arbitrators & his own on the points on which they disagreed:—Held: no improper devolution by the oversman, as all that was desired, was the opinion of skilled persons, & that had been obtained.—*NIVISON v. 212. Dung left & accepted by landlord—Liability under custom.]—Where an outgoing tenant left manure for the benefit of the landlord, which was accepted & taken by him:—Held: the law, without an allegation or proof of a custom of the country, would imply an assumpsit on the part of the landlord to pay the tenant the value, & the tenant was not deprived of that right by reason of his having held over after expiration of the term.—MARTIN v. COULMAN (1834), 4 L. J. K. B. 37.

213. Allowance for foldage by custom—Excluded by lease specifically providing for other outgoings.]—By the custom of the country, the outgoing tenant was entitled to an allowance for foldage from the incoming tenant. Where a lease specified certain payments to be made by the incoming to the outgoing tenant, at the time of quitting the premises, among which there was not included any payment for foldage:—Held: (1) the terms of the lease excluded the custom; (2) the outgoing tenant was not entitled to any allowance in respect of foldage.—WEBB v. PLUMMER (1819), 2 B. & Ald. 746; 106 E. R. 537.

Custom pleaded by incoming tenant—Effect of written agreement.]—To an action for trespass & de bonis asportatis for carrying away manure, etc., deft. pleaded a custom, applicable to all farms within the parish not being exempted therefrom by special agreement or otherwise, for the incoming tenant to enter the premises & take the manure, etc. Pltf. traversed the custom. At the trial deft. gave proof of the custom, but a steward's book was produced, not signed by deft., stating the terms on which he held. The judge received the book in evidence, & directed the jury that the custom could not apply as the farm was held under an agreement, & that they should find a verdict for pltf.:—Held: a rule to enter a verdict for deft. should be granted, in effect because deft. by traversing the custom & by the form of the pleadings was precluded from setting up evidence of an agreement.—EVANS v. OGILVIE (1828), 2 Y. & J. 79; 148 E. R. 840.

B. Where Covenant to leave Dung but none as to Payment therefor.

216. Custom as to payment excluded.]—The custom of the country is excluded where there is an express stipulation on the subject-matter to which it would otherwise apply, though such stipulation provides only for a part of the custom.

A tenant held under the terms of an expired lease, by which it was stipulated that the tenant on quitting the farm should not sell or take away any of the manure in the fold, but should leave it to be expended on the land by the landlord or his succeeding tenant. The lease contained no stipulation as to the tenant being entitled to payment for such manure. By the custom of the country, the tenant would have been bound not to sell or take away the manure in the fold, but to leave it to be expended on the land by the landlord or his succeeding tenant, & would have been entitled to be paid for same:—Held: (1) as an express stipulation had been made on the subject, the custom was excluded; (2) the tenant was not entitled to be paid for the manure.—*ROBERTS v. the outgoing tenant had covenanted with his landlord to leave the manure made by him on the farm & sell it to the incoming tenant at a valuation, to be made by certain persons:—Held: the effect of such covenant was to give the outgoing tenant a right of on-stand for his manure upon the farm, & possession of & property in it remained in him in the meantime, & if the incoming tenant removed & used it before such valuation, he was answerable to the outgoing tenant in trespass.—BEATY v. ELLIOTT (1890), 20 O. R. 134.—CAN.

PART III. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 4.—C.

217 i. Outgoing tenant's rights & remedies—Meaning of "winter dung."]—A tenant was bound to "consume the whole fodder growing upon the lands, etc., & to leave all the dung unconsumed in the last year of his possession, carefully gathered together, upon his getting payment of the winter dung, as its value shall be ascertained by two neutral men":—Held: (1) "winter dung" included all the dung made on the farm posterior to the crop preceding the tenant's removal; (2) the landlord was liable for the value of this & for what he had carried off pending the tenant's action.—LYLE v. GRAHAM (1824), 3 Sh. (Ct. of Sess.) 125.—SCOT.

217 ii. Meaning of "price."]—A tenant getting neither dung nor straw at his entry, & being taken bound to leave a year's dung as steelbow at his removal, on being allowed the "price" of the dung so left:—Held: entitled to its full value.—HERRIOT v. HALKET (1826), 4 Sh. (Ct. of Sess.) 452; 1 Sc. R. R. 793.—SCOT.

217 iii. — Amount fixed by arbitration—How far binding.]—By a document entitled "Proposed settlement" between a landlord and an outgoing tenant, the value of dung on the farm was stated to be 5s. per cubic yard, but this note was added: "The fallow, dung, & labour to be left open till the incoming tenant is consulted." The incoming tenant refusing to take the dung at this price, the matter was referred to arbn., & the landlord was also a party to the reference. The referee fixed the price at 4s. per cubic yard:—Held: the outgoing tenant must take the price fixed by the referee.—TWEEDDALE (MARQUIS) v. HUME (1848), 10 D. 1053.—SCOT.

217 iv. — Lease cancelled on landlord selling—Tenant remaining in possession under buyer.]—Pltf. leased from deft. a farm for a term of years, with the stipulation that the landlord might cancel the lease on giving six months' notice, but in such case he was to take at a valuation all the manure on the land in excess of the usual quantity left by outgoing tenants. The landlord, having sold the land, cancelled the lease, but the tenant continued in possession under the new proprietor at an increased rent:—Held: the tenant entitled to recover for the excess of manure on the land at the time of the cancelling of the lease.—GRANT v. LOCHEAD (1864), 2 L. C. L. J. 107.—CAN.

217 v. — Right to retain straw for cattle.]—A tenant, under lease with entry at Martinmas, was bound thereby to leave to the proprietor or incoming tenant at its expiry at Martinmas the dung that might be made after Jun. 15 immediately before the expiry "at a price to be paid by arbn." the lease requiring that all dung made previously should be applied to the lands. The lease also stipulated that no straw or dung of any kind that might be grown or made on the land should be sold or removed therefrom, but should be consumed for manure & applied to the land. In the district wherein the farm was the green crop was the only crop to which manure was applied. According to the custom which prevailed when the lease was entered into, the straw crop, with the exception of a small portion reserved for minor uses of the farm, was consumed in winter by cattle kept in courts (few cattle being kept in summer & those on pasture), & the manure so made was applied to the next year's crop. The tenant afterwards fed cattle in courts in summer, & to provide litter reserved half of the straw crop of the previous year, so that when he left the farm at Martinmas there was upon it a large amount of manure made after the immediately preceding June 15:—Held: the tenant had not accumulated the straw in violation of the lease & was entitled to receive payment for the manure made from it.—M'DUFF v. BALFOUR (1892), 19 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 440.—SCOT.

q. Landlord's right to set up parol agreement.]—A verbal bargain made nineteen years previously that, at removal, the tenant should leave, on payment at a certain rate, all the dung which might then remain & had not been consumed on the land, may be proved by witnesses.—WILSON v. SWAN (1804), Hume, 817.—SCOT.

PART III. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 5.

r. Agreement to "have full stock on the farm."]—A tenant in an agricultural lease was bound "always to have a full stock on the farm." The tenant died, & his widow continued to reside on the farm along with her son, the substitute in the lease. The widow having died, the landlord applied for interdict against her exors., & also against her son "dis-farm for eleven years, the lessee covenanting to render to P. at the end of the term a thousand sheep between two years shorn & four years shorn. Afterwards P. gave A., who married the daughter, the thousand cattle to have them after the term, & the term expired. P. (notwithstanding his gift) sold the cattle to X., who took them away with him. A. then seized them & sold them:—Held: the sale to X. was good, & the grant by P. to A. of the cattle during the term was utterly void, for P. during or after the term had not either a general or special property in the cattle, but only an action for breach of covenant against the lessee if he did not deliver a thousand sheep, as the lessee was not bound to deliver the same sheep but only such a number.—WOOD & FOSTER'S CASE (1586), 1 Leon. 42; 74 E. The sheep of the old stock were all spent, & others supplied, part by increase, part by purchase:—Held: (1) the increase of the stock of sheep went to the lessee, but if the lease were of the stock with lambs, calves & pigs, then the increase would belong to the lessor; (2) if the lease was of dead things, & anything was added to them for reparations or otherwise, the lessor should have this addition at the end of the term (per CUR.)—WOOD & FOSTER'S CASE (1586), 1 Leon. 42; 74 E. Specific performance of this covenant was refused.—ELY (DEAN & CHAPTER) v. STEWARD (1740), Barn. Ch. 170; 27 E. R. 600.

plenishing the farm . . . & from carrying into effect an intended sale of the whole stocking & farm implements":—Held: so broad an interdiction could not be granted, there being no proof of an intention to displenish the farm, & the son having consigned a year's rent.—EDMOND v. ABEL (1862), 24 D. 559.—SCOT.

s. No express provision in lease to take over stock—Whether custom can be read into lease.—A tenant, who had possessed a sheep farm under a formal lease embodying certain estate regulations, applied for a renewal of his lease by letter:—Held: the fact that the tenant had in the negotiations subsequent to the exchange of the missives repudiated any intention to be bound by the missives, did not prevent him from maintaining that the estate regulations as regarded taking over of sheep stock at the termination of the lease formed, on a true construction of the missives, part of the contract between him & the landlord.

If the tenant were able to prove a universal & clear custom in regard to the stock to be taken over by the landlord at the termination of the lease, such custom might be read into missives containing no express provision on the subject as part of the lease (LORD SHAW).—STEWART v. MACLAINE (1899), 37 Sc. L. R. 623.—SCOT.

t. Agreement to leave sheep stock at valuation—Basis of valuation.—A lease of a farm provided that the tenant should, at the end of the lease, leave the sheep stock on the farm to the proprietor or incoming tenant at a valuation to be fixed by arbn.:—Held: (1) it was the duty of the arbiter to value the sheep upon the basis of their value to an occupant of the farm in view of the arbiter's estimate of the return to be realised by such occupant from them, in accordance with the course of prudent management, in lambs, wool & price when ultimately sold, & not upon the basis either (1) of market value only, or (2) of the cost & loss which would be involved in the re-stocking of the farm with a like stock if the then present farm a proper & sufficient stock of sheep, horses, & cattle, as this would be in effect a judgment for specific performance.—PHIPPS v. JACKSON (1887), 56 L. J. Ch. 550; 35 W. R. 378; 3 T. L. R. 387.

223. Landlord's covenant to take over sheep at valuation.—A tenant, in a letter offering to take a lease of a farm for ten years from 1897, stipulated that at his "way-going at expiration of the lease" the landlord should take over the sheep at a valuation. The lease contained a clause that it should be forfeited for non-payment of rent, & the tenant having failed to pay five half-years' rent, the landlord put an end to the lease in Feb., 1902, & refused to take over the sheep:—Held: "way-going" must be taken to mean legal expiration of the lease, & the landlord on the tenant's default was not bound to take over the sheep.—BREADALBANE (MARQUESS) v. STEWART, [1904] A. C. 217, H. L.

224. Covenant to fold sheep.—A lease provided that the tenant should, during the term, fold his flock of sheep which he should keep on the demised premises, under a penalty if he omitted so to do:—Held: this amounted to a covenant to keep a flock of sheep upon the premises.—WEBB v. PLUMMER (1819), 2 B. & Ald. 746; 106 E. R. 537.

x. — Liability of landlord's executors under.]—A. leased a farm to pltf., & it was agreed that pltf. should at the term of entry take off the houses on the farm from the outgoing tenant C., who held under a lease granted by B., the father of A., & pay the appreciated value thereof above the dead or lying inventory, & that A. should, at the term of the tenant's removal, pay him a sum not exceeding one year's rent as the value of the meliorations, including the value of the houses so paid for. A valuation was made as between pltf. & C. with the full knowledge of A.'s factor, who suggested & obtained various reductions in the amount payable. A. died during the currency of pltf.'s term:—Held: his exors. were liable to repay to pltf. one year's rent, the value of the meliorations exceeding that sum.—RUNCIE v. YOUNG (1857), 19 D. 965.—SCOT.

—In the lease of a farm, the incoming tenant bound himself to pay to the outgoing tenant any sums he might be entitled to for meliorations, & the landlord bound himself, his heirs & successors, in respect thereof, to take the buildings on the farm at the expiry of the lease, on a valuation not exceeding a certain sum. The landlord having died during the currency of the lease:—Held: the landlord's obligation transmitted against his general representatives, & the exors. were not entitled to a declaratory judgment, as against the tenant, that the personal estate was not liable.—WALKER v. MASSON (1857), 19 D. 1099.—SCOT.

z. — Improvements destroyed by fire during tenancy.]—A lease of a mill stipulated that, within two years, the tenant should spend not less than £800 in repairing, renewing & adding to the machinery & thereafter maintain it in good repair, & on his leaving the whole machinery so renewed in good working order, the proprietor should be bound to pay him £400 at the end of the lease. The tenant, at the commencement of his lease, spent upwards of £800 on the machinery. During the currency of the lease the mill & machinery were destroyed by fire, the machinery being at that time in first rate working order, & worth more than £800:—Held: the tenant having fulfilled his obligations, his inability, in consequence of a damnum fatale, to hand over the machinery to the landlord, did not relieve the landlord from his obligation to pay the stipulated £400.—SCOTT (DUKE OF HAMILTON TRUSTEES) v. FLEMING (1870), 9 M. 329.—SCOT.

a. — Cannot be set off against landlord's claim for repairs.]—An agricultural tenant died in the fifth year of a nineteen years' lease. The landlord obtained a decree against the exors. (whom he refused to accept as tenants) for the expenses of repairing fences & buildings, which the tenant was bound to keep up. The exors. set off pro tanto against the landlord's claim the value of unexhausted increases & improvements, by which he was lucratus in consequence of the premature determination of the lease:—Held: the meliorations could not be pleaded in compensation against the landlord's claim.—SCOTT v. HEPBURN (1876), 3 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 816.—SCOT.

b. — Who can enforce—Creditors of bankrupt tenant.]—A landlord let a farm for twenty-one years, on condition inter alia of the tenant expending £1,100 in erecting a steading to be repaid at the end of the lease; the tenant laid out £600, & within three years, having become bkpt. & fled the country, decree of removal was pronounced for desertion, & it did not appear that the landlord was lucratus. e. — Parol agreement—Lease in writing.]—An action for repairs done on a farm under an alleged verbal agreement that such improvements should be paid for by the landlord:—Held: not maintainable, there being no stipulation in the lease as to improvements, & the tenant could not qualify or add to the written instrument.—*LOSER v. f. Landlord's right to set off arrears of rent.]—A granted a lease in 1801 to B., on the expiration of which in 1823 B. became entitled to £95 as meliorations. The lease was then renewed for nineteen years by C., A.'s successor, & payment was postponed till Whit-Sunday, 1842. The sum of £95 was claimed by the following persons; (1) C. on the ground that there were due under the original lease arrears of rent by B. to the amount of £71, & that the renewed lease contained a covenant that those arrears should be postponed until the valuations became payable; (2) D., who claimed under a disposition in favour of his creditors made by B.; (3) E. as assignee of the renewed lease:—Held: D. entitled to the sum of £95.—*DUFF v. Deft. who was in possession of the farm, on being sued for ejectment pleaded that he had made beneficial improvements to the property. Pltfs., when they bought, had no knowledge of deft.'s claims, & became mtgees. after the improvements had been effected:—Held: deft. not entitled to claim compensation for improvements.—*S. A. 229. Purchaser taking subject to existing tenancies.]—A contract was made in June, 1909, for sale of real estate, the conditions of sale providing that the leases or agreements under which existing tenancies were held could be inspected before the sale, & stating that the purchaser would be deemed to have notice of & take subject to all the terms of the existing tenancies, whether arising during the continuance or after expiration thereof. Before completion the purchaser discovered that a tenant of part of the property, to whom before completion notice to quit had been given by the vendor with the purchaser's concurrence, had, with the written consent of his landlord, planted fruit bushes on his holding, in respect of which, on expiration of his notice to quit (which would be after the date fixed for completion), he would have a claim for £50 for unexhausted improvements under A. H. Act, 1908, ss. 1, 2, or, alternatively, under the terms of his tenancy. Neither the tenant's lease, nor the agreement under which compensation was claimed, nor the landlord's consent, was disclosed or abstracted by the vendor before the sale, nor did the purchaser make any inquiry in respect thereof. The purchaser claimed that this sum was payable by the vendor, & completed without prejudice to that question:—Held: as the purchaser expressly took subject to all the terms of the existing tenancies, & compensation was a term of the tenancy, & as the purchaser must be presumed to have knowledge of the stat., he had constructive notice of the claim & was liable to pay the sum due for compensation.—Re DERBY (EARL) & FERGUSON'S CONTRACT, [1912] 1 Ch. 479; 81 L. an agricultural lease for nineteen years left the farm at the end of the third year, in consequence of the landlord's failure to implement an obligation to put the fences into good tenantable repair:—Held: the breach of the obligation did not entitle the tenant to terminate the contract of lease, & his abandonment of the farm did not constitute a "determination of the tenancy" within A. 234. —.]—A landlord in 1887 demised a farm to deft. for a term expiring in 1901. The lease provided (clause 13) that in the last year the landlord might enter & sow certain seeds, & that the tenant should also leave gratis for the landlord "all the roots remaining unconsumed in the ground, & also all improvements made by the tenant, & all cultivations, dressings, & manures, in consideration of no claim being made by the landlord for similar matters on the tenant now entering"; (clause 14) that the tenant might, at his own cost, convert into an orchard so much of certain meadow lands as he thought proper; & (clause 21) that A. H. Act, 1883, should not apply to the contract of tenancy. Shortly after the tenancy commenced deft. turned part of the meadow land into an orchard, in which in 1901 were over one thousand two hundred trees (apple, pear, plum & cherry) in good bearing condition, & though not capable of removal, worth some hundreds of pounds, to an incoming tenant. Deft. also erected ten glass-houses. One had concrete sides, & its glass span roof substantially rested on the sides & could be removed without damaging the walls. In the case of the other houses the glass span-roofs were supported by & nailed to wide sills, which in turn were nailed to & supported by wooden piles driven into the ground. In these houses deft. grew grapes, peaches, nectarines, tomatoes, & strawberries, which he sold in Reading & Covent Garden, carrying on the trade of a market-gardener with his landlord's knowledge:—Held: (1) Market Gardeners' Compensation Act, 1895, s. 4, only applied to improvements made after Jan. 1, 1896, & did not assist deft.; (2) as the glass-houses were erected without the landlord's written consent required by A. H. Act, 1883, s. 3, deft. was precluded from obtaining compensation for them; (3) deft. was entitled to compensation for the trees.—MEARS v. CALLANDER, [1901] 2 Ch. 388; 70 L. J. Ch. 621; 84 L. #### PART V. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 1.—D.

237 i. Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1908 (c. 64)—Tenancy current at commencement of—Improvements executed before January 1, 1908.—The words "has then executed thereon" in s. 29 (2) of the above Act mean "has thereafter executed thereon."—TAYLOR v. STEEL-MATLAND, [1913] S. C. 562; 50 Sc. L. R. 395; 1 S. L. T. 224.—SCOT.

237 ii. —Improvements tenant bound to execute under lease.—A lease required the tenant to cultivate the lands according to the rules of good husbandry, & in particular to follow a specified rotation according to which a certain proportion would be in temporary pasture sown more than two years before, the area thus laid down being approximately equal to the area in similar pasture which the tenant received at the commencement of the lease. The tenant having claimed compensation for the temporary pasture at his way-going in respect that it was an improvement within the above Act:—Held: he was not entitled to compensation, as he was only fulfilling the contractual obligation which he had undertaken in the lease, & as he was only leaving the farm as it was at the beginning of the lease.—GALLOWAY (EARL) v. M'CLELLAND, [1915] S. C. 1062; 52 Sc. L. R. 822; 2 S. L. T. 128.—SCOT.

237 iii. —.]—By the terms of his lease the tenant of a farm was taken bound to cultivate the lands on a five-shift rotation, which involved two years in succession under grass, with the declaration that "the tenant may, if he prefers it, allow any portion of the lands specified to be cultivated in a five-shift rotation to lie in grass for a longer period than two years, but on his breaking it up he shall be bound to adhere to the rotation above prescribed, with this exception, that he shall be entitled to take two white crops in succession after grass which has lain not less than three years":—Held: at the termination of his lease, the tenant, who had allowed certain fields to lie in temporary pasture for more than two years, was not entitled to compensation under the above Act for that temporary pasture as an improvement, as in laying down the temporary pasture he was only fulfilling a contractual obligation under the lease.—FINDLAY v. MUNRO, [1917]

236. —Tenancy from year to year.—By virtue of s. 61 of A. H. Act, 1883, of which Act Market Gardeners' Compensation Act, 1895, ss. 1, 3, 4, are to be read as part, a tenancy from year to year, under a contract of tenancy current at the commencement of the last-mentioned Act, must for the purposes of that Act be deemed to continue to be a tenancy under a contract of tenancy current at the commencement of the Act until the first day on which it could be determined by notice to quit given immediately after the commencement of the Act, & thereafter be deemed to be tenancy under a contract of tenancy beginning after the commencement of the Act. Therefore a tenant from year to year, under a contract of tenancy current on Jan. 1, 1896, of a holding which was at that date used to the knowledge of the landlord as a market garden, is not, in the absence of any agreement that the premises should be let or treated as a market garden, entitled to compensation for improvements executed by him or his predecessors after the earliest day on which, if notice had been given immediately after Jan. 1, 1896, the tenancy could have been determined.—Re KEDWELL & FLINT & Co., [1911] 1 K. B. 797; 80 L. J. K. B. 707; 104 L. T. 151; 55 Sol. Jo. 311, C. A.

237. Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908, s. 2—"Consent"—What is.—The mere fact that fruit trees & fruit bushes are referred to in a lease of lands, with the manifest object of evading the common law obligation to allow same to remain thereon at the expiration or sooner determination of the lease, is in itself no evidence of any consent on the part of the landlord to the making of any improvement comprised in Sched. I. (1) of the above Act within s. 2 thereof.

Where a lease provided that if the tenant should plant the demised lands, or any part thereof, with fruit trees, bushes, or plants, & the tenant should desire to remove same at the expiration or sooner determination of the lease, he should be allowed until a specified date to remove same, provided, nevertheless, that if the lessors should desire to take & purchase such fruit trees, bushes, & plants, they should give notice to the tenant & pay the tenant the fair value thereof to an incoming tenant:—

Held: that clause did not amount to a consent of the nature dealt with by that sect.—Re MORSE & DIXON (1917), 87 L. J. K. B. 1; 117 L. T. 590, C. A.

237 iv. —"Continuous good farming" not improvement.—The proprietor of an estate let a farm by a lease, which provided, inter alia, that the tenant was to farm the whole land according to the rules of good husbandry. On the termination of the tenancy the tenant claimed compensation for unexhausted improvements, & inter alia, for the increased fertility of the farm due to "continuous good farming":—Held: the arbiter in granting an award for "continuous good farming" had acted ultra vires, it not being an improvement specified in the above Act.—BRODIE-INNES v. BROWN (1916), 54 Sc. L. R. 170; [1917] 1 S. L. T. 49.—SCOT.

237 v. —"Benefit"—What is.—A lease contained a provision, by which the tenant was bound to apply to the land a certain amount of farmyard manure per acre, & so far as he had not sufficient farmyard manure for the purpose, to make up the amount with artificial manure. On quitting his holding the tenant claimed compensation for the unexhausted value of artificial manure applied in terms of that provision. The landlord maintained that the tenant

I. of the above Act, & of three other matters not mentioned in the Act. The amount to be paid was to be ascertained by two valuers appointed by the landlord & the tenant respectively. In an action by the tenant to recover the amount agreed on by the valuers:—Held: (1) such an agreement between landlord & tenant was not prohibited by the above Act; (2) the claim not being for compensation under the Act, the procedure under the Act did not apply to it; (3) pltf. was entitled to recover in the action.—*NEWBY v. The lease provided (clause 14) that the tenant might, at his own cost, convert into an orchard so much of certain meadow land as he thought proper, & (clause 21) that the above Act should not apply to the contract of tenancy. Shortly after the tenancy commenced deft. turned part of the meadow land into an orchard, in which in 1901 were over one thousand two hundred trees (apple, pear, plum, & cherry) in good bearing condition, & though not capable of removal, worth some hundreds of pounds to an incoming tenant:—Held: (1) as the orchard was planted with the landlord's consent in writing, which was held to be given by the lease, deft. was entitled to compensation for the trees under ss. 1 & 3 of the above Act, there being nothing in clause 13 of the lease (see No. 234, ante) to exclude him from compensation; (2) if clause 13 must be construed as excluding deft. from statutory compensation, the attempted exclusion was inoperative by reason of s. 55 of the Act, & deft. was entitled to compensation for the trees.—MEARS v. CALLENDER, [1901] 2 Ch. 388; 70 L. J. Ch. 621; 84 L. T. 618; 65 J. P. 615; 49 W. R. 584; 17 T. L. R. 518.

240. Market Gardeners' Compensation Act, 1895—Exclusion of procedure under.]—A landlord agreed that he would allow the tenant of a farm, who was desirous of cultivating the farm as a market garden, a market garden valuation on his quitting the farm. The tenant expended large sums in cultivating the farm as a market garden & afterwards received notice to quit, but he did not give notice to claim compensation within the time prescribed by A. H. Act, 1883, s. 7. He claimed compensation in respect of improvements, for the whole of which he could have claimed under the above Act & Market Gardeners' Compensation Act, 1895, ss. 3, 4, if he had given the requisite notice:—Held: the tenant could claim compensation under the agreement notwithstanding s. 57 of the former Act, which prohibited a tenant from claiming compensation, otherwise than in the manner authorised by the Act, for improvements he could have claimed under the Act, as that sect. applied only to tenants claiming under the Act, but not to a tenant claiming compensation under an agreement outside the Act.—Re PEARSON & I'ANSON, [1899] 2 Q. B. 618; 68 L. J. Q. B. 878; 81 L. T. 289; 63 J. P. 677; 48 W. R. 154; 15 T. L. R. 452.

241. Agreement for substituted compensation.]—Fixed sums were specified in two leases of market gardens as compensation for the exercise by the landlord of a power reserved to him by the lease of resuming possession of any part of the land, on giving notice to the tenant. The tenant was on quitting the holding to leave all fruit trees. One lease provided that no allowance was to be paid to the tenant other than the compensation specified was not entitled to claim compensation for manure applied in terms of the lease, in respect that he had received a "benefit" in the sense of s. 1 (2) (a) of the above Act in consideration for that improvement, viz., the benefit of having to pay less rent than he would otherwise have had to pay:—Held: such an implied benefit was not a benefit within the above sect.—M'QUATER v. FER-GUSSON, [1911] S. C. 640; 48 Sc. L. R. 560; 1 S. L. T. 295.—SCOT.

237 vi. — — — — —.]—A tenant under a lease, entered into before the above Act, claimed compensation under that Act for an improvement in respect of temporary pasture laid down by him in carrying out the system of cultivation imposed on him by the lease. The landlord maintained that, if compensation fell to be awarded, the arbiter must set against it the temporary pasture handed over to the tenant free of charge on his entry as being, in terms of s. 1 (2) (a) of the Act, a "benefit" which the landlord had given or allowed to the tenant in consideration of his executing the improvement. There was no reference in the lease to the temporary pasture received by the tenant on his entry:—Semble: this temporary pasture must be taken into account as being a "benefit" under the above sub-sect.—GALLOWAY (EARL) v. M'CELLAND, [1915] S. C. 1062; 52 Sc. L. R. 822; 2 S. L. T. 128.—SCOT.

237 vii. — — — — —.]—A tenant entered a farm in 1882 & continued his occupation thereof under a new lease granted in 1901. The lease provided a five-course rotation for the worked land, but contained this clause: "Declaring, however, that the tenant may, if he prefers it, allow any portion of the lands specified to be cultivated in a five-shift rotation to lie in grass for a longer period than two years, but on his breaking it up he shall be bound to adhere to the rotation above prescribed with this exception, that he shall be entitled to take two white crops in succession after grass which has lain not less than three years." At his outgoing the tenant left a large amount of temporary pasture, & claimed compensation therefor under the above Act. Semble: (1) the right given to take two white crops in succession off land, which had been three years in grass, was not a benefit allowed by the landlord to the tenant under s. 1 (2) (a), of the Act; (2) a benefit consisting in temporary pasture received at the commencement of the lease would fall to be estimated as at the beginning of the last lease, not as at the tenant's first entry to the lands, e.g., in this case in 1901 & not in 1882.—FINDLAY v. MUNRO, [1917] S. C. 419; 54 Sc. L. R. 316; 1 S. L. T. 203.—SCOT.

237 viii. — "Dissent"—What is.]—Under a lease, dated May, 1892, of a farm of 150 acres let, "primarily as an agricultural subject," the tenant was "entitled to use all or so much of the land" as he might think proper for the purposes of a market garden, but subject to conditions, including a condition as to rotation of crop, which permitted only two years' continuous cultivation of market garden produce. The tenant annually kept 50 acres, but not always the same 50 acres, under cultivation as a market garden. In 1902 he proceeded to erect a forcing-house for the production of early rhubarb, the process being that the rhubarb stools were forced in the house & then transplanted to the fields where they remained for from three to five years. While the forcing-house was being erected the landlord's factor wrote to the tenant inquiring as to his intentions, & advising him that the conditions of the lease would be "strictly enforced." The house was completed, & rhubarb was cultivated until the expiry of the lease in 1911, when the tenant claimed compensation for improvements on his holding under the above Act in respect of the forcing-house erected by him & of rhubarb stools left in the ground:—Held: (1) the fact that the ground cultivated had varied from time to time did not prevent the 50 acres under cultivation at the expiry of the lease from being a market garden within s. 29 of the Act, for the purpose of a claim for compensation for improvements; (2) the factor's letter was a "notice of dissent" within s. 29 (2), in so far as the improvements claimed for were in contravention of the lease; (3) the tenant was entitled to compensation for the rhubarb, but only if & in so far as the cultivation had not been in contravention of the terms of the lease, & for the forcing-house, but only if & in so far as it constituted an improvement in connection with such a cultivation.—TAYLOR v. STEEL-MAITLAND, [1913] S. C. 562; 50 Sc. L. R. 395; 1 S. L. T. 224.—SCOT.

therein. By the other lease the compensation specified was expressed to be "in lieu of" compensation to which the tenant might be entitled under A. H. Act, 1883:—Held: the tenant was entitled under Market Gardeners' Compensation Act, 1895 (which was to be read and construed as part of A. H. Act, 1883), to compensation for trees planted in 1896 in addition to the compensation specified in the leases.—Re SMITH & DEVONSHIRE (DUKE) (1906), 22 T. L. R. 619, C. A.

242. Agricultural Holdings Act, 1900—Attempted exclusion of statutory time for claim.]—Resp., a tenant farmer of applt., gave notice in the terms of his lease of his intention to terminate his tenancy at Nov. 28, 1908. Upon Nov. 9, 1908, he sent to applt. notice of his claim for compensation for improvements, in the terms of A. H. (Scotland) Acts, 1883 (c. 62) to 1900 (c. 50), & upon Nov. 26, sent an amended claim. An arbiter was appointed, but applt. applied for an interdict to prevent the arbiter from acting, on the ground that resp. had lost his right to compensation by virtue of the following provision embodied in the lease: "Provided always that no claim for compensation under the Acts, or under these conditions, shall be made by the tenant later than one month before the determination of the tenancy":—Held: the clause in the agreement was void, for it attempted to deprive resp. of the right to compensation under A. H. Act, 1900, under which he was entitled to make his claim up to the last day of the tenancy.—CATHCART v. CHALMERS, [1911] A. C. 246; 80 L. J. P. C. 143; 104 L. T. 355, H. L.

During the continuance of the tenancy a quantity of hay & straw stacked on the farm was destroyed by an accidental fire:—Held: upon termination of the tenancy, the landlord was not entitled, in answer to a claim by the tenants under A. H. Acts, 1883-1890, in respect of unexhausted improvements, to claim compensation for the loss of the manurial value of hay & straw so destroyed as a breach of the agreement, as the contract only related to such crops as were in existence & capable of being stacked upon the farm & consumed thereon.

PART V. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 1.—E.

242 i. Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1900 (c. 50)—Exclusion of statutory compensation.]—It was provided in the lease of a farm that with regard to certain specified improvements the tenant should receive, in lieu of the compensation provided by stat., compensation according to a schedule annexed to the lease, the amount falling agreement to be ascertained by two arbiters, one to be chosen by each party, or by an oversman to be named by the arbiters before entering on the reference, in case of their differing in opinion. On the termination of the lease the tenant served on the landlord a notice of claim for compensation, setting forth five separate heads of improvements, all of these being improvements, for which a tenant was entitled to receive compensation under the above Act, while heads 1 to 3 belonged to the class of specified improvements, for which compensation was to be given according to the schedule annexed to the lease. The tenant having named an arbiter, & the landlord having refused to name another, the Board of Agriculture, upon an application from the tenant, nominated a second to act on behalf of the landlord. In an action of suspension & interdict brought by the landlord against the tenant & arbiters:—Held: with respect to improvements under heads 1 to 3 statutory arbn. was incompetent, having been excluded by the agreement in the lease.—HAMILTON (GILVY) v. ELLIOT (1904), 42 Sc. L. R. 41.—SCOT.

243 i. Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1908 (c. 64)—Agreement for substituted compensation.]—A lease dated in 1900 provided that with reference to A. H. (Scotland) Act, 1883, the compensation payable to the tenant on the determination of his tenancy should not exceed the rates & proportions specified in a schedule annexed to the lease, & that the compensation therein provided should be held as substituted for that under the Act. The schedule annexed to the lease provided, on the basis of a fraction of the "cost" of the manure varying with the year of application, for certain specified artificial manures under three heads, & proceeded— "IV. Other artificial manures. Exhausted by first crop—no compensation. V. Feeding stuffs. For linseed, cotton, & rape cakes, or for other purchased substances of equal manurial value consumed on the farm by cattle & sheep & pigs during the last year of the lease, one-third of the value thereof. If consumed on permanent pasture, three-sixths of the value thereof if applied in last year, two-sixths if in second last year, & one-sixth if in third last year. Exhausted in four years." In a note appended to the schedule it was, inter alia, provided: "From the amount to be paid in compensation for the unexhausted manurial value of feeding stuffs the arbiters shall deduct any sum which in their opinion has been or shall be paid to the tenant on account of any increased award, by reason of the manurial value of the feeding stuffs consumed, put upon the dung left by the tenant":—Held: (1) the schedule falling to be read as a whole, head IV. was not void under A. H. (Scotland) Act, 1908, s. 5, but validly precluded the tenant from claiming compensation for artificial manures, other than those specified, which had grown a crop; (2) "value" in head V. meant, not actual cost price, nor then present cash value, nor residual manurial value, but original manurial value—i.e., the value of the manurial constituents of the feeding stuffs, such as nitrogen, potash, etc., before the feeding stuffs were consumed; (3) the tenant was validly precluded from claiming compensation for feeding stuffs of the character specified in head V., which were consumed on the holding (exclusive of the permanent pasture) prior to the last year of the lease; (4) the tenant was entitled to compensation in respect of the consumption on the holding of feeding stuffs, the manurial residuum of which entered the farm-yard manure left unapplied to the land by the tenant at outgoing, but subject always to deduction of such sum as might be found deductible under the provisions of the note appended to the schedule.—BROWN v. MITCHELL, [1910] S. C. 369; 47 Sc. L. R. 216; 1 S. L. T. 65.—SCOT.

243 ii. —Attempted exclusion of statutory notice of claim.]—In a claim by tenants of a holding for compensation under the above Act in respect of drainage improvements, it appeared that no notice in compliance with s. 3 (1) of the Act had been given by the tenants to the landlord, but the tenants maintained that there had been an agreement under s. 3 (4) to dispense with notice. It was proved that, before the improvements were executed, the tenants had interviews with the landlord's factor, at which, although the question of compensation or notice was never specifically raised, the factor was informed of the nature of the proposed work; & that the tiles were supplied to the tenants under orders given by the landlord's factor & were paid for by the landlord, while the cartage & the laying of the drains were done by the tenants at their own expense, & that this was the custom on the estate:—Held: in these circumstances an agreement to dispense with the notice required by s. 3 (1) of the Act could not be inferred.—BARBOUR v. M'DOULL, [1914] S. C. 844.—SCOT.

243 iii. —Exclusion of statutory compensation.]—A lease between the landlord & the tenant of a farm provided that the value of certain unexhausted improvements, which the tenant at his entry to the farm had received without payment, should form a deduction from any sum that might be found due to him as compensation on his way-going:—Held: the stipulation did not contravene s. 5 of the above Act.—BUCHANAN v. TAYLOR, [1916] S. C. 129; Sc. L. R. 86; 2 S. L. T. 455.—SCOT.

245. Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883—Compensation calculated under Agricultural Holdings Act, 1875.]—Held: (1) a notice by a tenant in occupation of a tenancy, current at the commencement of the above Act, of a claim for compensation for improvements executed after the commencement of the Act, was good, if given under the above Act, though the compensation was to be based upon the principles of A. H. Act, 1875; (2) the compensation for such improvements was to be calculated on the basis of A. H. Act, 1875, & not of A. H. Act, 1883.—SMITH v. ACOCK (1885), 53 L. T. 230; 49 J. P. 789.

Resp. quitted possession of the houses (with the exception of the barns, barn-yard, & two cot-houses), & also of the grass & fallow lands, at the term of Whit-Sunday, 1892. He thereafter, on June 6, 1892, gave applt. notice of a claim for improvements:—Held: there were three terms of removal in regard to different portions of the subject-matter of the lease, & a notice four months before the “separation of the crop” (or its equivalent term Martinmas) after Whit-Sunday, 1892, was sufficient within A. H. (Scotland) Act, 1883 (c. 62), s. 7, which differed only from s. 7 of the English Act of 1883 in that the notice required was four months instead of two.—BLACK v. CLAY, [1894] A. C. 368; 71 L. It was further provided that the tenant should have right to the barn, threshing mill, & barnyard, till the “term of Whit-Sunday, after the termination of the lease, for the purpose of stacking & threshing his way-going crop”:—Held: “the determination of the tenancy” was at Martinmas, although the tenant was entitled under the lease to remain in occupation of the land under turnips, & a limited use of jurisdiction under s. 11 of the above Act or C. C. R., 1889, O. 40, r. 7, to appoint a referee for one of the parties without the consent of such party, & it is not sufficient that such party has not expressed his dissent, but actual consent must be given & is a condition precedent to the jurisdiction of the registrar. If no such consent has been given, the power to appoint a referee for one party upon application of the other is exercisable by the judge alone under s. 11 of the Act, notwithstanding the above rule, & an award which states that one of the referees was appointed by the registrar, without also stating that the consent of the parties was given, is bad on the face of it.—Re GRIFFITHS & MORRIS, [1895] 1 Q. The parties appointed referees, & afterwards an umpire, whose award did not specify the particulars as required by s. 19 of the Act:—Held: the reference was only a common law reference, & was none the less so because it included matters within the stat., & the award was final & binding on the parties.—*SHRUBB v. H. Act, 1883, & it also provided that ss. 7 to 28, both inclusive, of that Act relating to procedure should apply as well to any claim of the outgoing tenant for allowance or compensation to be made under the lease as to any claim under the Act. Subsequent to expiration of the tenancy an award was made in an arbn. held under the Act, which showed on the face of it the matters in respect of which the sums thereby awarded were given, & also that it dealt as well with matters which were properly the subject of allowance & compensation under the Act as with matters outside the Act. On an application by the tenant, the ct. judge made an order under s. 24 of the Act for enforcement of the award. The landlord moved for a writ of prohibition against the ct. judge enforcing the award or proceeding further with the matter:—Held: as the award on the face of it disclosed a want of jurisdiction so far as it dealt with matters which were not the subjects of allowance & compensation under the Act, the landlord was entitled to a writ of prohibition against enforcement of the award under s. 24 in respect of those matters, notwithstanding the agreement contained in the lease & the fact that the landlord had by his conduct acquiesced in the exercise of jurisdiction by the ct. judge.—*FARQUHARSON v. Act, 1908, on being served with notice of motion to set aside his award appears & takes part in the proceedings, he thereby makes himself one of the active parties, & he may be ordered to pay costs. Further, if he has been guilty of such collusion as would entitle one of the parties to bring an action against him, & his award is set aside on the ground of misconduct of that kind, costs may & ought to be given against him, whether he appears in the proceedings in the ct. or not.

A ct. judge set aside an award made under the above Act, on the ground of technical misconduct on the part of the arbitrator, & ordered the arbitrator to pay appct.'s costs. The arbitrator had been subpoenaed by both parties to the arbn., & he appeared in the ct., but took no active part in the proceedings, nor did he endeavour to uphold his award. No suggestion was made of dishonesty or want of bona fides on his part:—Held: in those circumstances the ct. judge was not entitled to order the arbitrator to pay the costs. C. C. (Agricultural Holdings) R., 1909, O. 40, r. 4 (1), which provides, inter alia, that on an application under the above Act for an order setting aside an award on the ground of the arbitrator's misconduct the arbitrator shall be made a party, is not ultra vires.—*LONDON v. The arbitrator stated a special case for the opinion of the ct. upon the question of the tenant's liability under the lease, & this question was ultimately decided in the landlord's favour. The arbitrator by his award awarded the landlord as compensation one-tenth of the amount claimed, & directed that each party should bear his own costs of the litigation as to liability, & that the remainder of the costs of the arbn. should be borne by the landlord:—Held: the arbitrator was acting in the exercise of his discretion &, in the absence of proof of misconduct or want of jurisdiction, the award could not be set aside.—*GRAY v. After expiration of the time for giving notices of claim prescribed by the Act, both parties gave notices of further claims, some of which were in respect of matters not within the Act. Referees & an umpire having been appointed in pursuance of the Act, before the reference proceeded, an agreement in writing was made between the parties, by which all matters in difference as stated in the claims & counterclaims were referred to the referees & umpire already appointed under the Act, & it was agreed that all the matters should be dealt with in one award only of the referees or umpire. The referees disagreeing the umpire made an award, by which he found that a certain amount was due from the lessor to the tenant, & a larger amount was due from the tenant to the lessor, & awarded that the tenant should pay the balance to the lessor. Under this agreement the parties respectively appointed arbitrators. The landlord refused to permit the arbitrator appointed by him to concur in the appointment of an umpire. Upon an application by the tenant, the Board of Agriculture appointed an umpire, who made an award in favour of the tenant. Upon an application by the tenant under A. H. Act, 1883, s. 24, the ct. judge made an order that the sum awarded should be recoverable from the landlord. The landlord formally objected to the Board of Agriculture before the appointment by the Board of an umpire, & also before the ct. judge at the hearing of the case :—Held : (1) the arbn. never was one to which A. #### SUB-SECT. 2.—COMPENSATION FOR DISTURBANCE.

265. Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908—Increased rent demanded—Onus of proof.]—A landlord, who gives the satisfactory tenant of an agricultural holding notice to quit for the sole reason that he can obtain an increase of rent from another prospective tenant of equal standing, has good & sufficient cause for giving the notice to quit, & a reason not inconsistent with good estate management within A. H. Act, 1908, s. 11 (a).

From 1895 to 1911 B. was a good & satisfactory tenant of a market garden ; he improved the heart of the land by continuous high cultivation, effected certain improvements at his own cost, for which he would not receive full compensation, & had thereby increased the letting value of the holding. The landlords gave B. notice to quit for the sole reason that he refused to pay a further increased rent demanded of him. Such further increased rent was not proved to have been demanded by reason of an increased value of the holding resulting from the improvements executed by B. The landlords relet the holding to a new tenant at the further increased rental demanded from, & refused by, B. :—Held : B. not entitled to compensation for unreasonable disturbance either under clause (a) or clause (b) of s. 11.

Where an increase of rent is demanded from the tenant of an agricultural holding, & such demand results in the tenant quitting the holding, the onus in the first place is on the tenant to prove that such increase was demanded by reason of an increase in the value of the holding due to improvements executed by the tenant (FARWELL, L.J.).—Re BONNETT & FOWLER, [1913] 2 K. not necessary, in order to bring a case within A. H. Act, 1908, s. 42 (2), that it should be proved that a market garden had been in existence for a course of years, yet the sub-sect. clearly contemplates that there shall be some set of circumstances known to the landlord existing at the statutory date which lead to the conclusion that the holding was "at that date in use or cultivation as a market garden." Where a lease of lands that had been used & cultivated as a general farm was executed, leaving it optional to the tenant as to whether he would use same as a market garden or as an ordinary farm, but the landlord had knowledge when granting the lease that the tenant intended to use the lands as a market garden—an intention which he might carry out or not as he pleased—and the tenant had simply ploughed the greater part of the lands before the statutory date, intending to plant thereon fruit trees & fruit bushes, which he did subsequently & cultivated the lands as a market garden:—Held: there was a perfectly colourless & neutral act from which no inference could be drawn, excepting that the lands were being cultivated for some purpose, & the above sub-sect. had no application.—Re MORSE & DIXON (1917), 87 L. o. Stable fittings.]—A tenant was bound by his lease to leave the fences, houses, etc., "in sufficient order, & good tenantable, habitable, & useful condition." An action was brought against him for payment of the sum alleged to be necessary to put the houses & fences into good repair. The Lord Ordinary—after an inspection—pronounced judgment for the necessary amount. On appeal it was contended that the inspector's report was objectionable in so far as it did not allow anything for supplying trevies, racks, & mangers, which had been put up by the original tenant in a cottage, not originally used as a stable, but fitted up by him as such, & which he had taken away on removal agreeable to a common practice of the neighbourhood. The Ct. adhered to the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor.

Semble: if the trevies had been permanent fixtures, the case might have been different.—SCOTT v. KWART (1824), 3 Sh. (Ct. of Sess.) 344.—SCOT.

p. Threshing machine.]—A landlord bound himself, as there were no offices on the farm, to pay to the tenant £600, "for the purpose of building & erecting a farmstead, threshing-mill, & offices; & the tenant bound himself "to build the mains, offices, & thrashing-mill upon the farm, sufficient for the farm," & he further obliged himself to uphold & keep in repair, & leave in good order & condition at his removal, the mains, offices, & threshing-mill which he was to build. The tenant accordingly built the offices at an expense exceeding by several hundred pounds the sum paid him by the landlord, & he fitted up the threshing mill with machinery. At the expiry of the lease:—Held: the tenant had no right to carry away from the farm the machinery of the threshing-mill & its relative appendages, or any part thereof.—CAMPBELL v. HOWDEN (1825), 3 Sh. (Ct. of Sess.) 569.—SCOT.

q. — & steam-boiler.]—A tenant, while in possession under his lease, set up for agricultural purposes a threshing machine & steam-boiler. The threshing machine was fastened to four bolts fixed in the ground, but was capable of being detached from them by unscrewing four nuts at the end of the bolts, & removing the shaft of the machine, which passed through the wall of the house, both of which could be done without injury to the freehold. The steam-boiler was set in brickwork, which rested on the floor in the corner of the outhouse, & touched both walls, but was capable of being removed by detaching the upper tier of the brickwork, without injury to itself or to the outhouse:—Held: the threshing machine & steam-boiler were not fixtures as between landlord & tenant, & the tenant was entitled to remove them, on the expiration of his tenancy, as removable chattels.—*SHINNER v. r. Shed.]—Inside a kraal on a farm was a shed, the roof of which, consisting of corrugated iron sheets screwed on to rafters, rested in front on poles fixed in the ground & at the back on the stone wall of the kraal. The shed had been erected by a lessee in occupation of the farm at the time it was sold, & who removed the shed after the sale, but before transfer:—Held: the shed was a fixture forming part of the farm which the vendor was bound to deliver with the farm.—*CAIRNCROSS v. 269. Barn—Custom of the country.—Deft. was sued in trover for ten loads of timber; he was tenant to pltf., & had erected a barn on his holding & placed it upon blocks & pattens of timber lying on the ground. Evidence was admitted of a custom of the country for barns to be erected in that manner in order to allow them to be taken away at the end of the tenancy:—Held: deft. entitled to take away the barn.—CULLING v. Wooden barn—Conversion by reversioner.—A tenant is entitled, at expiration of his term, to remove a wooden barn which he has erected on a foundation of brick & stone, the foundation being let into the ground, but the barn resting upon it by weight alone. He may maintain trover for such a barn against a party converting it. If the reversioner, having refused, while off the premises, to allow such a tenant to take away the barn, afterwards, while a third party is in possession of the land, come on the land & prevent the tenant from entering to take the barn away, this is a conversion by the reversioner.—WANSBROUGH v. 273. Rick saddles—Threshing machine—Granary—Vendor & purchaser—Reversioner.—Pltf. purchased a farm from the devisees in trust of the father of deft., & the premises were conveyed by a deed, to which deft. was a party as one of the devisees. Pltf. demised the premises to M. immediately after the conveyance, & deft., who was in the occupation of the farm at the time of the conveyance under a lease from the devisees, removed some rick saddles, a threshing machine, & a granary from the premises after the demise to M. The deed conveyed the land & all fixtures, & the articles in question had been put on the land by deft.'s father:—Held: (1) everything attached to the land having passed by the deed, deft. had no right to remove the articles as fixtures removable by an outgoing agricultural tenant; (2) the removal of the rick saddles, which were stone pillars mortared to a foundation of brick & mortar let into the earth, with stone caps mortared on the pillars, & of the threshing machine, which was fixed by bolts & screws to posts which were let into the ground, was an injury to pltf.'s reversionary estate for which deft. was liable in an action; (3) a granary laid on a wooden foundation supported by staddles, & which could be lifted from them by sufficient power without disturbing them, was a chattel, though it might pass under the word "fixtures" in a deed of conveyance, if there were other words in the deed denoting an intention of passing chattels, & it appeared, from the circumstances of the case, to be comprehended under that word, but the removal of it would not support a count for an injury in the reversionary estate of pltf., nor a count in trover, since M. was entitled to exclusive possession.—WILTSHIER v. Hay-cutter, etc.—Mortgagor & mortgagee—Goods affixed to freehold after date of mortgage.—Things firmly annexed to the freehold by a mtgor. in possession after the date of the mtge., for the purpose of improving the inheritance, pass to the mtgee., & do not pass to the assignees of the mtgor. upon his bkpcy.; & that rule applies as well to trade as other fixtures, the mtgor. not being in possession as tenant to the mtgee.

In 1853 M. mtged. land in fee to O. M. After the date of the mtge. M. erected buildings upon the land, & fixed thereto by means of screws & bolts a steam engine (connected with a boiler), hay-cutter, corn-crusher & grinding-stones. The steam engine was what was called a portable engine, & used for the purpose of pumping water into some baths which he had built upon the premises, & also for working the other machines & the grinding-stones. All these things were used by M. for the purposes of trade. On Aug. 20, 1858, O. M., the mtgee., sold, under a power of sale in the mtge., the mtged. premises to deft. On Sept. 4 M. became bkpt. In an action by the assignees of M. to recover possession of the steam engine, hay-cutter, corn-crusher & grinding-stones:—Held: having been firmly annexed by the mtgor. to the freehold, & there being nothing to show an intention between the mtgor. & mtgee. that fixtures annexed subsequent to the date of the mtge. should not pass as the mtged. estate, they passed to the mtgee., & so to deft.—WALMSLEY v. 276. .]—A landlord in 1887 demised a farm to deft. for a term expiring in 1901. The lease provided that the tenant should leave gratis for the landlord all improvements made by the tenant, in consideration of no claim being made by the landlord for similar matters on the tenant entering, & that the tenant might, at his own cost, convert into an orchard so much of certain meadow land as he thought proper, & that A. H. Act, 1883, should not apply. Shortly after the tenancy commenced deft. turned part of the meadow land into an orchard, in which in 1901 were over one thousand two hundred trees (apple, pear, plum, & cherry) in good bearing condition, & though not capable of removal, worth some hundreds of pounds to an incoming tenant. Deft. also erected ten glass-houses. One had concrete sides, & its glass span-roof substantially rested on the sides & could be removed without damaging the walls. In the case of the other houses the glass span-roofs were supported by & nailed to wide sills, which in turn were nailed to & supported by wooden piles driven into the ground. In these houses deft. grew grapes, peaches, nectarines, tomatoes, & strawberries, which he sold, carrying on the trade of a market gardener with his landlord's knowledge:—Held: (1) at common law deft. could not cut down or remove the orchard trees; (2) at common law deft. could lawfully remove the glass-houses, unless precluded by the lease; (3) the lease did not preclude him, as "improvements" did not include glass-houses; (4) the common law right of deft. to remove the glass-houses was left untouched by A. H. Act, 1883, s. 34 of which was lawfully excluded by the lease; (5) deft. was entitled to remove the glass-houses.—MEARS v. CALLENDER, [1901] 2 Ch. 388; 70 L. J. Ch. 621; 84 L. T. 618; 65 J. 277. — Boiler & pipes for greenhouse—Rights of mortgagee as against owner of fixtures.]—Pltf. claimed damages against defts. for the removal of a boiler & pipes from certain greenhouses on grounds belonging to E., of which pltf. was mtgee. E., the mtgor., was a nurseryman, & tenant of the premises on a long lease. The boiler & pipes were the subject of a hire & purchase agreement, by which defts. agreed with E. that the boiler & pipes should become his property on the payment of the price by certain instalments, but that until complete payment they were to remain the property of defts. E.'s lessor joined in the agreement. The mtge. was made after the agreement, & without notice of it, but before the boiler & pipes were fixed upon the premises. The boiler & pipes were fixed in brickwork. E. made default in payment of the instalments, & the boiler & pipes were removed by defts. under the agreement while E.

was still in possession of the premises. The ground of pltf.'s claim was that the boiler & pipes had been affixed to the mtged. property without his consent, & had become part of the soil, & were irremovable against him:—Held: (1) pltf., by allowing E. to remain in possession, impliedly authorised him to carry on his business of nurseryman, which would properly include the hiring & bringing on to the premises of fixtures necessary to his business, upon the terms that the owner should be at liberty to remove them on determination of the hiring agreement; (2) having regard to this implied authority, to the fact that the fixtures were not the property of E., & that E. was in possession at the date of their removal, pltf.'s claim failed.—GOUGH v. WOOD & CO., [1894] 1 Q. B. 713; 63 L. J. Q. B. 564; 70 L. T. 297; 42 W. R. 469; 10 T. L. R. 318; 9 R. 509, C.A.

278. Injunction to restrain removal.]—Pltf. granted a lease to B. of a house with certain fixtures mentioned in it, & the lease contained a covenant by B. that he would spend upon the premises all hay & manure arising from them. Defts. having got from him a bill of sale of all his effects, entered upon the premises & advertised to be sold by auction not only all B.'s furniture, but the fixtures included in the lease, & all hay & manure upon the premises, & a dog-kennel & other out-buildings, & fences, gates, & many other things affixed to the freehold, & were proceeding to pull them down in order to sell them. Upon a bill being filed, & before defts.' appearance, an injunction to restrain defts. from selling or removing from the premises any of the fixtures or other things which then were, or lately had been, affixed to the freehold, & hay & manure which had been made on the premises, was applied for. An injunction was granted as to the fixtures & manure, as well as to restrain waste by pulling down the buildings, etc. Qu.: whether an injunction had ever been granted for breaking a covenant.—GEAST v. BELFAST (LORD) (1796), 3 Anst. 749, n.; 145 E. R. 1027.

279. Sub-lease—Right of superior landlord—No implied guarantee by sub-lessor.]—In an under-lease of a nursery ground reserving the last three days of the term, the sub-lessee covenanted to deliver up to the sub-lessor the premises & all landlord's fixtures. The sub-lessee was not aware that his immediate lessors held under a superior lease, by which they were bound to deliver up all trade fixtures at the end of the term, & he placed on the ground greenhouses & other trade fixtures, which shortly before the end of the term he sold, whereupon the reversioners under the superior lease obtained an injunction to restrain their removal. The sub-lessee sued his immediate lessors for loss of his trade fixtures, & the costs incurred in reference to the injunction:—Held: the action was not maintainable, as it could not be implied that the sub-lessors had guaranteed that pltf. might remove his trade fixtures without interference from the superior landlord.—PORTER v. A. afterwards gave B. notice that he should not have the grass, & sold it to C. B. entered privily & cut part of the grass; A. then gave notice to him not to mow, & C., under the direction of A., mowed & carried off same:—Held: B. could not have trespass quare clausum fregit, nor de bonis asportalis, for it was a contract for an interest in or concerning land under Stat. 282. ———— Crops.]—A declaration stated that pltf. was possessed of a farm, upon which were certain growing crops, & on which pltf. had done certain work & labour, & expended certain materials in making the lands ready for tillage, of which work, labour, & materials he, pltf., had not derived the benefit; & that, in consideration that pltf. would let the farm to deft. for fourteen years, deft. undertook to take the crops, & pay for them, & for the work, labour, & materials, according to a valuation. Averments that pltf. let the farm accordingly, & left the crops upon it, & that deft. took possession of the farm, & had the benefit of the work, labour, & materials, & that the valuation was made, but that deft. did not pay. Plea, that the crops, & the benefit of the work, labour & materials, were not excepted or reserved out of the letting or agreement to let, & that there was no agreement in writing in respect of those causes of action, or any memorandum or note thereof, signed by deft. or any person by him lawfully authorised:—Held: the contract was for an interest in land, & the right to the crops, & the benefit of the work & labour, were both of them an interest in land within Stat. Frauds, s. 4.

To an indebitatus count for crops bargained & sold, & under & by virtue of such bargain & sale, accepted & taken, & had & received & cut down by deft., deft. pleaded that the crops, at the time of the bargain & sale, were growing upon & affixed to certain lands, & that before the bargain & sale there was a treaty on foot between pltf. & deft., by which it was proposed that pltf. should let the lands to deft., & that deft. should take therewith the crops, & that deft. assented to the treaty, & that, in order to carry the treaty into effect, the supposed bargain & sale was verbally contracted between pltf. & deft., & that there was no agreement in writing or any memorandum or note thereof:—Held: the crops were, at the time of the bargain & sale, an interest in the land, & the case was within Stat. Frauds.

The same point was held on a similar plea to a count for work, labour, & materials.

In indebitatus assumpsit upon an account stated deft. pleaded that, before the taking of the account, there was a verbal agreement for the sale of certain crops growing upon pltf.'s land, & for work, labour & materials, done & used in preparing the land for tillage, & that there was a treaty for pltf.'s letting & deft.'s taking the land for fourteen years, to which deft. assented, & that the money to be paid for the crops, & the work, labour, & materials, was the money concerning which the account was stated, & that there was no agreement in writing or any note thereof. To this plea pltf. replied that, before the account was stated, deft. had mown the crops & taken them to his own use, & had & received the amount of the work & labour & materials. Deft. rejoined, traversing that he had cut down the crops, & received the amount of the work & labour, etc., before the stating of the account:—Held: the contract, as appearing on the pleadings, was within Stat. Frauds, & pltf. could not recover.—FALMOUTH

PART VIII. SECT. 1.

282 i. Sale—Interest in land—Passing before severance—Statute of Frauds—Crops.]—Declaration for breaking & entering pltf.'s close & cutting & carrying away the grain. Plea, that pltf. held the land under an indenture of lease from deft., on the negotiation for & execution of which it was verbally agreed between them that deft. should have the right to enter & harvest the crop then in the ground sowed by him, that when the lease was executed a reservation of such right in it was suggested, but omitted on pltf.'s assurance that it was unnecessary,

& that the entry, etc., in pursuance of such agreement, was the trespass complained of:—Held: the plea was good, for the independent verbal agreement was good as an agreement, though deft., by s. 4 of the above Act, might be prevented from suing on it.—MCGINNESS v. KENNEDY (1869), 29 U. C. R. 93.—CAN.

A. declared in indebitatus assumpsit for a moiety of the value of the crop sold to B. without stating the special agreement:—Held: he might well do so, as the special agreement was executed by the appraisal, & the action arose out of something collateral to it. Semble: such an agreement need not be in writing under Stat. Frauds.—POULTER v. KILLINGBECK (1799), 1 Bos. & P. 397; 126 E. R. 973.

285. ————— Underwood.]—In an action of trespass, the question was whether pltf., who had purchased by parol the underwood then standing, to be cut by him, had such a possession as would enable him to maintain trespass against defts. for cutting & carrying away:—Held: a contract for sale of growing underwood, to be cut by the purchaser, was a contract for sale of an interest in land under Stat. Frauds, s. 4, & pltf. had no possession sufficient to maintain the action.—SCORELL v. BOXALL (1827, ), 1 Y. & J. 396; 148 E. R. 724.

286. ————— Trees.]—A sale of growing timber, to be taken away as soon as possible by the purchaser, is not a contract or sale of land or any interest therein within Stat. Frauds, s. 4.

Deft. by word of mouth purchased certain growing trees for £26 of pltf. on the terms that he, deft., should remove them as soon as possible. Deft. cut down some of the trees & agreed to sell the tops & stumps to a third party. Pltf. countermanded the sale & prohibited deft. from cutting down the rest of the trees. Deft., however, cut down the remainder & carried the whole away:—Held: the case was within Stat. Frauds, s. 17, & before the sale was countermanded there was an acceptance & actual receipt of part of the goods sold within that sect.—MARSHALL v. GREEN (1875), 1 C. P. D. 35; 45 L. J. Q. Annotations:—Distd. Lavery v. Pursell (1888), 39 Ch. D. 508. In Marshall v. Green the intention of the parties unquestionably was to sell & buy as timber; the trees being standing trees to be cut by the purchaser, the ct. held that it was not within s. 4. Now the ct. appear to have considered that there was no interest in the land, & I am bound of course by the English law to say that a tree is not a chattel; but a line must be drawn somewhere, & I draw the line at this case because on the facts it is quite different or materially different from Marshall v. Green (CHIRRY J.). Consd. Jones v. Tankerville, [1909] 2 Ch. 440; Kauri Timber Co. v. Taxes Comr., [1913] A. C. 771, P. C. The present is a broad case of the natural products of the soil in timber—a crop requiring long continual possession of land until maturity is reached; the judgment of Bret, J. in Marshall v. Green distinguished this broad case & properly accepts the note in Saunders' Reports which has been cited (LORD SHAW OF DUNFERMLINE). Refd. Jarvis v. Jarvis (1893), 63 L. J. Ch. 10.

287. ————— Stamp Acts—Hops.]—A written agreement for the sale of all hops which shall be grown upon a certain number of acres of land, to be delivered in pockets at a certain place, cannot be given in evidence unless stamped with an agreement stamp, such an agreement not being within the exception in 23 Geo. 3, c. 58, s. 4, respecting agreements for the sale of goods, wares & merchandises.—*WADDINGTON v. 289. ——— Passing after severance—Statute of Frauds—Timber.—A., the owner of trees growing on his land, verbally agreed with B., while they were standing, to sell him the timber at so much per foot. B. afterwards offered to sell the butts of the trees to a third party, & said he would convert the tops into building stuff. A. afterwards, by letter, required B. to pay for the timber, which B. had bought of him. B. wrote a letter in answer, stating he had bought the timber, but he had bought it to be sound & good, & it was not so:—Held: (1) the contract was not a contract for the sale of land within Stat. Frauds, s. 4, but was a contract for the sale of goods, wares, & merchandises within s. 17; (2) as the purchaser did not in his letter recognise the absolute contract described in the vendor's letter, but stated one conditional as to quality, there was no note in writing of the bargain to satisfy Stat. Frauds; (3) there had been no part acceptance or actual receipt of the goods to satisfy the stat., as there was nothing to show that the purchaser had divested himself of his right to object to the quality of the goods, or that the seller had lost his lien for the price.—SMITH v. SURMAN (1829), 9 B. & C. 561; 4 Man. & Ry. K. B. 455; 7 L. J. O. S. K. B. 296; 109 E. R. 209.

At the time of the bargain written memoranda had been made of the transaction, but these memoranda (one of them an item in a book of accounts), being neither stamped nor signed with the names of the parties, were not produced in evidence, & pltf. was nonsuited:—Held: the nonsuit was proper.—*TEAL v. Frauds, s. 17, & void for want of a memorandum in writing. Semble: since Weights & Measures Act, 1824 (c. 74), an agreement to sell by the Winchester bushel, not containing any declaration of the proportion which that measure bore to the imperial bushel, was void.—WATTS v. FRIEND (1830), 10 B. & C. 446; L. & Welsb. 193; 5 Man. & Ry. K. B. 439; 8 L. J. O. S. K. B. 181; 109 E. R. 516.

interest in the soil. Semble: growing crops are not an interest in land within 2 & 3 Vict. c. 37.—WASHBOURN v. BURROWS (1847) 1 Exch. 107; 5 Dow. & L. 105; 16 L. J. Ex. 266; 154 E. R. 45.

293. ——— Crops.—Pltf., at Lady Day, 1821, gave up possession of a farm to deft., having previously sown 40 acres of it with wheat. At a meeting in the previous month pltf. asked deft. if he would take the wheat at £200, saying, if he would not, he should not have the farm. Deft. said he would take the wheat, & being asked to whom the dead stock should be valued, replied, "To me." Deft. afterwards undertook to pay for the wheat & dead stock on a specified day, & paid £75 on account generally, & eventually had possession of the farm, the wheat & the dead stock. In indebitatus assumpsit for crops bargained & sold, & for goods sold & delivered:—Held: (1) the contract for the dead stock being distinct from the contract for the sale of the wheat, or the giving up of the farm, pltf. might recover for that amount; (2) (dub. LITTLEDALE, J.) deft. having received the wheat & made a payment on account of it, pltf. might recover for the rest of that amount.

It is said it appears that the parties bargained for an interest in land. It seems to me there was nothing more than a conditional agreement for the crops in the event of deft. leaving the land. . . . There was no evidence of any engagement that the offgoing tenant should assign his interest in the land to deft., & that might cease at Lady Day when the possession was to be given up. He, therefore, had no interest in the land to part with, & the contract was not for the sale of any interest in the land (HOLROYD, J.).

A parol agreement for the sale of crops may be good between the outgoing & incoming tenant; but then there would be no sale of any interest in the land, for that would come from the landlord (LITTLEDALE, J.).—MAYFIELD v. WADSLEY (1824), 3 B. & C. 357; 5 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 224; 3 L. J. O. S. K. B. 31; 107 E. R. 766.

(c. 50)—On whom binding—Purchaser.]—Pltf. demised a farm to R., who covenanted not to remove any hay, straw, fodder, manure, etc., but to use & employ it in a husbandlike manner upon the premises. R. sold a quantity of wheat to defts., who removed it together with the straw in defiance of pltf.'s remonstrances:—Held: the prohibition in the above Act was not confined to purchasers under an execution, but operated to prevent any purchaser of farming stock being on the land from carrying it off contrary to the lease. — WILMOT (WILLMOT) v. 300. ———— Trustee in bankruptcy.] —
The enactment in s. 11 of the above Act that the assignee of any bkpt. shall not take or use any hay, straw, etc., on any farm of bkpt. in any other way than bkpt. ought to have done, is still in force, & applies to a trustee in bkpcy. or liquidation under Bkpcy. Act, 1869 (c. 71).

A lessee was bound by the covenants in his lease not to sell hay, straw, etc., grown on his farm without the permission of the landlord. The lessee became a liquidating debtor under Bkpcy. Act, 1869

(c. 71), s. 125, & the trustee in the liquidation disclaimed the lease:—Held: the trustee was bound by Sale of Farming Stock Act, 1816 (c. 50), s. 11, notwithstanding the disclaimer, & an injunction was granted to restrain him from selling the hay, straw, etc., grown on the farm.—*LYBBE v. 301. — By landlord under distress.]—Sale of Farming Stock Act, 1816 (c. 50), s. 11, does not apply to a sale by a landlord of a distress. A lease of a farm contained a covenant by the tenant not to remove hay, unthreshed corn, etc., from the demised premises, but to use them for the improvement of the land. The landlord, having distrained hay & unthreshed corn for rent in arrear, sold the distress under a condition that the purchaser should consume the matters sold on the premises, & consequently the best price was not obtained in accordance with 2 Wm. & M. c. 5:—Held: the landlord could not legally sell under such a condition.—HAWKINS v. WALROND (1876), 1 C. P. D. 280; 45 L. J. Q. B. 772; 35 L. T. 210; 40 J. P. 824; 24 W. R. 824.

302. — What Included—Severance before time for completion.]—Pltf. agreed to buy an estate "including the hay, growing crops, etc." The time fixed for completion was June 24, but it was afterwards extended till Sept. 29, & in the meantime defts. had cut & sold the hay & crops:—Held: (1) pltf. was entitled only to those crops in existence at the time of completion; (2) he had no right to the proceeds of the sale of those cut & gathered before Sept. 29.—WEBSTER v. DONALDSON (1865), 34 Beav. 451; 11 Jur. N. S. 404; 13 W. R. 515; 55 E. R. 710.

303. — At valuation—Time essence of contract.]—C., tenant of a farm who was jointly with pltf. entitled to the farming stock & growing crops, agreed with defts., to whom he had arranged to transfer the farm, that certain growing crops on the farm should be taken by defts. at a valuation made by certain valuers on Apr. 1, 1844, & the amount secured by defts.' joint promissory note, but that such valuation should be examined & revised on Aug. 1 next ensuing, & that the parties should be bound by any alteration then made in it. The valuers on Apr. 1 estimated £41 to be due to pltf. for the crops after certain deductions, & defts. gave their promissory note for that amount. The valuers could not attend on Aug. 1, & the crops were in fact viewed on Aug. 2 only. The value was finally fixed on Aug. 12, & it was proved that the value had not altered between Aug. 1 & 2. According to the revised valuation, the sum due to pltf. was only £3 5s. In an action on the promissory note :—Held : the time fixed for the revision of the valuation was of the essence of the contract, & pltf. was entitled to the full amount of the note.—MARSHALL v. POWELL (1846), 9 Q. B. 779; 16 L. J. Q. B. 5; 8 L. T. O. S. 159; 11 Jur. 61; 1 New Pract. Cas. 590; 115 E. R. 1475.

304. — Failure of specific crop—Vis major.]—Deft. in Mar., 1872, agreed to sell to pltf. 200 tons of Regent potatoes grown on land belonging to deft., at a certain price, to be delivered in Sept. & Oct., 1872. Deft., at the time of the contract, had 68 acres ready for planting potatoes, part of which was already sown, & the rest was sown afterwards. This quantity of land was enough in ordinary years to produce more than 200 tons. From no fault of deft., but in consequence of a potato blight which occurred in Aug., the crop failed, & deft. was able to deliver only 80 tons. In an action for non-delivery of the remainder:—Held: the contract being for the sale of part of a specific crop, the case was within the principle of Taylor v. Caldwell (1863), 3 B. & S. 826, & delivery of the potatoes being prevented by vis major, deft. was excused from performance of the contract.—HOWELL v. COUPLAND (1876), 1 Q. B. D. 258; 46 L. J. Q. B. 147; 33 L. T. 832; 40 J. P. 276; 24 W. R. 470, C. A.

305. Failure of crop not specific.]—Defts., market gardeners, entered into a contract to supply plfts. with a quantity of gherkins. In reply to plfts. defts. wrote: "We could offer you in green probably about 50 hogsheads, & say 150 hogsheads large at the same price as last year." Defts. subsequently wrote: "We accept your offer . . . for 50 hogsheads crooked green at 30s. per hogshead; 150 hogsheads large green at 21s. per hogshead; 150 to 200 hogsheads second flower at 27s., as required; terms as usual." Owing to the weather, & through no fault or negligence of defts., the crop of gherkins was a failure. An action having been brought for damages for breach of contract:—Held: (1) the contract was for a specific quantity of a particular kind of goods, & did not refer to gherkins only grown on defts.' land; (2) defts. were liable for failure to deliver.—*HAYWARD BROTHERS, LTD. v. 308. —.]—By a bill of sale, made in 1855, R., in consideration of £400 advanced by T., assigned to T. all the crops of corn, etc., growing on his farm at B., or upon any other farm which R. at any time during continuation of the security might thereafter occupy, also implements of husbandry, etc., tenant rights, & all rights which R. might be entitled to on quitting his present or any other taken farm, & all other personal property of R. The deed provided that, for the more effectually securing to T. payment of the money, R. irrevocably appointed T., her exors, etc., his lawful attorney or attorneys, in his or their name or names, to make & perfect any assignment, transfer, or delivery of any goods or chattels, etc., or any other personal estate or property not legally passing by the effect of the assignment therein made, & to which R. should, before satisfaction of that security, become beneficially possessed of or entitled to; & it contained a power for T., her exors., etc., to break doors & take possession of any of the effects of R. of which he was then possessed, or should thereafter acquire, & to occupy & possess any of the lands of R. for the purpose of selling any growing crops. After execution of the deed, & while the debt was unpaid, R. took another farm. In 1857 crops growing on the farm at B., & also crops standing on the farm taken by R. after the bill of sale, & farming stock & other goods of R., some of which had been acquired since the bill of sale, were seized by the exor. of T. under the bill of sale:—Held: (1) the deed operated to authorise seizure of future property; (2) by seizure a good title was acquired to the crops standing on the new farm, as well as those upon the old farm.—*CARR v. 309. — Right of entry.]—To a declaration in trespass for assault defts. pleaded a justification in defence of the possession of a dwelling-house. Pltf. newly assigned that the trespasses were committed not in a dwelling-house, but on a certain bridge & in certain yards & fields, parcel to a farm. The plea to the new assignment stated that W. was possessed of the dwelling-house, & also of the bridge, yards, & fields, which belonged & were adjacent to the dwelling-house, & then justified the trespasses in defence of the possession of the house, bridge, yards, & fields, & then averred that defts. removed pltf. from the bridge, yards, & fields, & took him by the nearest way to a public highway near to the dwelling-house, bridge, yards, & fields. The replication alleged the seisin of W. in the farm, the demise of it by him to J. as tenant from year to year, the entry of J., an assignment by J. to B. to secure a debt of the then & future growing crops on the farm, with a power to B., in default of payment, to take possession. It then alleged a default by J., that W., at the time of the default, was in possession of the farm, on which there then were growing crops which belonged to J. after the date of the assignment, that pltf., as servant of B., took possession, & continued in possession, of the growing crops for a reasonable time, & that before a reasonable time had elapsed defts. removed him, & dragged him from the dwelling-house, across the bridge, yards, & fields, to the highway:—Held: the replication was bad, as it did not show any right in B. to place a person on the premises to retain possession of the growing crops after J.'s tenancy had come to an end, & the landlord had regained possession, & if B.'s right so to do depended upon the mode of termination of the tenancy, or the nature or condition of the crops, the replication ought to have set forth the circumstances which abridged the prima facie rights of the owner of the farm to remove all other persons from it.—*HAYLING v. 310 v. —.]—A. held a decree of a competent ct. of revenue for possession of certain land as against B., & obtained under that decree formal possession of that land. B. removed his crop, & thereafter sued in a civil ct. for a declaration that he was A.'s tenant of the land in question holding occupancy rights. A. did not defend the suit, & the civil ct. passed a declaratory decree in favour of pltf., & further proceeded to execute that declaratory decree by putting B. in possession. Subsequently B. sued A. for damages in respect of the alleged removal by A. of a second crop, which he asserted that he had sown upon the land :—Held: B. had no cause of

Before the expiration of the lease the place was sold to a purchaser. After the purchase, & before the lessee had harvested his crop, the purchaser entered on the land & ploughed it up, thereby causing injury to the lessee :—Held: (1) the purchaser was a trespasser & liable for damages; (2) no liability was imposed on the lessor under the covenant for quiet enjoyment.—NEWELL v. See, now, LANDLORD & TENANT ACT, 1851 (c. 25).

316. Nature of right—What crops.]—A tenant for a term, determinable upon a life, sowed the land in spring, first with barley, & soon after with clover. The life expired in the following summer. In the autumn the tenant mowed the barley, together with a little of the clover plant which had sprung up. The clover so taken made the barley straw more valuable by being mixed with it, but the increase of the value did not compensate for the expense of cultivating the clover, & a farmer would not be repaid such expense in the autumn of the year in which it was sown. The reversioner came into possession in the winter, & took two crops of the same clover after more than a year had elapsed from the sowing:—Held: the tenant was not entitled to emblements of either of these two crops ; because (1) emblements can be claimed only in a crop of a species which ordinarily repays the labour by which it is produced within the year in which that labour is bestowed ; (2) even if pltf. were entitled to one crop of the vegetable growing at the time of the cesser of his interest, this had been already taken by him at the time of cutting the barley.—GRAVES v. WELD (1833), 5 B. & Ad. 105 ; 2 Nev. & M. K. B. 725 ; 2 L. J. K. B. 176 ; 110 E. R. 731.

Replication, that defts. had nothing in the close except under R.; that before the time when, etc., & before defts. had anything in the close, R. demised it from year to year to W.; that W. permitted pltf. to plant a crop of teazles on condition that W. should have one half of the crop, & pltf. the other, & that pltf. entered to cut his teazles, when defts. assaulted him:—Held: the replication was a sufficient answer to the plea, though it did not allege that W.'s interest in the land was continuing when pltf. entered to cut the teazles.

A tenant from year to year does not know in what year his lessor may determine the tenancy by half a year's notice to quit; in that respect, at least, he has an uncertain estate; the public interest requires that he who grows a crop shall have a right, where his landlord determines the tenancy, to claim it as emblements; otherwise every tenant from year to year whose holding commences at Michaelmas, & who plants his crop early in the spring, may, by a notice to quit given at Lady Day, be deprived of the fruit of his labours whenever the harvest is protracted beyond Michaelmas. Therefore, though the tenancy of W. might have been determined before the teazles were mature, yet he & pltf. had a right to enter for the purpose of gathering the teazles which pltf. had planted during the tenancy (BEST, C.J.).—KINGSBURY v. A. died in the middle of a year of H.'s tenancy, & M. thereupon became entitled to the reversion, & at the expiration of the then current year of H.'s tenancy, distrained for the proportion of the rent due since A.'s death:—Held: (1) the above Act applied to all tenancies in respect of which there might be a claim to emblements; (2) but for the Act, there might have been a substantial claim to emblements, & the premises were "a farm or lands" within s. 1; (3) that sect. gave a right to distrain for the rent, as well as to recover it by action.—HAINES v. 370. — — — Evidence.]—Where beech is admitted to be timber by the custom of the country, the general rule of law applicable to timber trees in general attaches upon it, so as to give it the properties & privileges of timber at twenty years' growth. Upon an issue whether certain beech trees in the county of Bucks (which after being felled had been distrained for payment of a poor rate, to which it was contended they were liable) were or were not timber according to the custom of the country, the inquiry is confined to the nature of the wood & the period of growth, whether of twenty years; no evidence can be received to qualify its character of timber by showing that it was not deemed to be such in the county, unless the tree contained 10 ft. of solid wood.—AUBREY v. 393. Underwood—Meaning of term.]—The term underwood is generally applied to species of wood which grow expeditiously & send up many shoots from one stool, the root remaining perfect from which the shoots are cut, & producing new shoots & so yielding a succession of profits. Horse chestnuts, limes, plane trees & aspen, though not timber, are not underwood. Firs & larches planted with oaks for the purpose of sheltering the latter, & cut from time to time as the oaks grow larger & require more space, the primary object being to protect the oaks & not to derive a profit from them by sale, are not underwood. At all events, they are not saleable underwood within 43 Eliz. c. 2 (BAYLEY, J.).

The term signifies coppice as distinct from haut-bois. Wood which is not timber is not necessarily underwood ; thus beech, aspen, horse-chestnut, lime & walnut trees are not necessarily underwood in places where they are not timber by custom (HOLROYD, J.).—*R. v. 402. Evidence of ownership—Reputation.]—To an action of trespass for cutting down & converting trees, which deft. justified as growing upon his soil & freehold, pltf. replied that the trees were his freehold, & not deft.'s:—Held: this was proved by showing that they grew on a certain woody belt, 15 ft. wide, which surrounded pltf.'s land, but was undivided by any fences from the several closes adjoining, of which it formed part, belonging to different owners, & that from time to time pltf. & his ancestors, at their pleasure, cut down, for their own use, the trees growing within the belt, & the several owners of the different closes including the belt never felled trees there, though they felled them in other parts of the same closes, & that when they made sale of their estates, the trees in the belt were never valued by their agents, because they were reputed & considered to belong to pltf. & his ancestors, in which the several owners acquiesced.—STANLEY v. PART IX. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 1.

403 i. Overhanging trees—Right to cut.]—A proprietor is not entitled, without obtaining authority so to do, to cut down trees & shrubs growing on his neighbour's land, on the line dividing their respective properties, on the ground that the trees & shrubs in question interfere with the cleaning of the boundary ditch, more especially where the weight of evidence shows that the ditch could have been cleaned without cutting the trees & shrubs.—BAIN v. MONTEITH (1892), Q. R. 2 S. C. 337.—CAN.

403 ii. —.].—Pltfs. sued for an injunction restraining defts. from obstructing them in cutting certain branches of a pipal tree overhanging their property. The pipal tree grew in the inclosure of a temple, & the resistance was based on the ground that the tree was an object of veneration to Hindus, & that the lopping of its branches would be offensive to the religious feelings of the Hindu community:—Held: pltfs. were entitled to the injunction prayed for, & the fact that pltf.'s action might cause annoyance to a large number of Hindus was not a sufficient ground for cutting down the well-recognised common law rights of an owner of property.—BEHARI LAL v. GHISA LAL (1902), 1 L. L. R. 24 All. 499.—IND.

407 i. —. Action for damages.]—The branches of a tree growing on defts.' land extended over pltfs.' land & brushed against pltfs.' house, & disturbed them in their sleep, & the leaves from the branches also blocked the downpipe from gutters on the roof of pltfs.' house:—Held: pltfs. had a good cause of action for damages in respect thereof. Semble: defts. would not be liable for any damage done by the roots of the trees extending into pltfs.' land.—ROSE v. EQUITY BOOT CO., LTD., & HANNAFIN (1913), 32 N. Z. L. R. 677.—N.Z.

407 ii. —. Injunction.]—As every owner of land is under an obligation not to allow the branches of his tree to grow so as to overhang, or the roots of his tree to extend so as to penetrate, his neighbour's land to the detriment of the latter, in case of breach of such an belonging to & in the land of an adjoining owner, overhanging the land on which the crops are growing. In such case the person whose crops are injured by the overhanging branches of his neighbour's trees is not confined to his remedy by cutting off the branches which overhang his land, but may maintain an action for the damage.—*SMITH v. A. went immediately on B.'s land & took them:—Held: although the cuttings belonged to A., he could not go on to B.'s land to fetch them, & an action of trespass lay against him.

A. was liable, unless he had done all he could to prevent the fall of cuttings on B.'s land. As to boughs blown down by the wind, A. could have entered & taken them (CHOKE, J.).—ANON. (1466), Y. B. 6 Edw. 4, fo. 7, pl. 18.

411. Tree growing against wall—Right to remove.—Pltf. sued deft. in trespass for breaking & entering his close & cutting a tree. Deft. pleaded that it was wrongfully growing against his wall & he removed it as he lawfully might:—Held: a good defence, provided the jury found such cutting down was not in excess of what was necessary to remove the injury to deft.—*PICKERING v. 412. Poisonous trees — Yews projecting beyond boundary.—Defts. purchased a piece of ground some seventeen years before pltf.'s action for purposes of their cemetery & fenced it round with a dwarf wall 2 ft. high, with, at two places, open iron railings 2 ft. high on top of the wall. In the part of their ground opposite these railings, & about 4 ft. within same, defts. planted two yew trees, which in the course of time grew through & beyond the railings, & projected on & over the adjoining meadow occupied by pltf., & which he had, for some two years before the action, hired for the purpose of pasturing his horse therein. The horse, having eaten a quantity of the leaves & branches projecting over pltf.'s meadow, was poisoned thereby:—Held: (1) defts. were liable to pltf. in damages for loss of his horse; (2) it was immaterial whether or not defts. knew yew trees were poisonous to cattle, as, in either case, they must be held responsible for the direct consequences of their own act in the original planting of the trees; (3) pltf. was not bound to examine all the boundaries of the field which he had hired, so as to see that no tree likely to be injurious to his horse was projecting over it.—CROWHURST v. AMERSHAM BURIAL BOARD (1878), 4 Ex. D. 5; 48 L. J. Q. B. 109; 39 L. T. 355; 27 W. R. 95.

413. — Landlord & tenant.—A landlord let a farm to a tenant, retaining in his own possession adjoining land, on which was a shrubbery containing yew trees so near the farm that the branches of the yew trees overhung the boundary & were within reach of the tenant's cattle & horses. The tenant's mare ate of the branches & died. The yew trees overhung the land substantially to the same extent & in the same condition both at the commencement of the tenancy & at the date when the mare ate of the branches:—Held: a lessee takes the property as he finds it, & as the tenant took the land with the branches of the yew trees at that time overhanging it so as to be within reach of horses, the landlord was not liable for the loss of the mare.—CHEATER v. CATER, [1918] 1 K. B. 247; 87 L. J. K. B. 449; 118 L. T. 203; 34 T. L. R. 123; 62 Sol. Jo. 141, C. A.

414. — Yews not projecting beyond boundary.—Declaration that deft. was possessed of yew trees upon land belonging to him & in his occupation, the clippings of which trees were, to his knowledge, poisonous to horses & cattle, whereupon it became his duty to take due care to prevent the clippings from being put or placed upon land other than his own or in his occupation, where the horses & cattle of his neighbours & others might be enabled to eat them. Breach, that deft. took so little care of the clippings that they were put & placed upon land other than his own or in his occupation, whereby pltf.'s horses were enabled to eat the clippings, & were poisoned & killed:—Held: the declaration was bad, as it disclosed no facts from which a duty could be inferred in deft. to take care of the clippings, & was consistent with the inference that the clippings had been carried from deft.'s land by a stranger, or through some cause over which deft. had no control.—*WILSON v. 407 iii. — Apprehension of damage at future time—Right of action.—Pltf. claimed removal of certain trees, planted by deft. on his own land, on the ground that the trees had been planted so near his land that, when they grew up, they would injure his crops:—Held: until pltf.'s enjoyment of his own land was directly & immediately interfered with by the growth of deft.'s trees, he had no right to ask for their removal, & he had, therefore, no cause of action.—RAM LALL v. DALGANJAN (1883), I. L. R. 5 All. 369.—IND.

h. Roots of trees undermining boundary wall.—The roots of certain trees planted on deft.'s land, & close to a boundary wall belonging to pltf., grew & penetrated into pltf.'s land & under his wall, & so caused it to fall. No part of the yew tree projected over pltf.'s land, but some branches could be reached by the horse stretching its neck over a ditch which belonged to defts., & which divided their land from pltf.'s field. No duty on the part of defts. to fence their land from pltf.'s cattle was proved. 416. ——— Landlord & tenant.]—A., tenant for life of an estate, in 1868 leased to B. a farm adjoining plantations, in which yew trees were growing & which the lessor reserved to himself. In Mar. & Sept., 1869, sheep belonging to B. died from having eaten of the yew that protruded through the fence surrounding the plantations & clippings of yew that had been thrown over the fence by A.'s gardener. A. died in Feb., 1870; B. continued to hold the farm as tenant of the trustees of the will by which the estate was settled. In Sept. & Oct., 1870, four steers belonging to B. got over a ditch, which happened to be nearly dried up, on to land in the hands of the trustees, & died from eating yew there. A bill for the administration of A.'s estate was filed in Feb., 1871, & B. brought in under the decree a claim against A.'s exors. for damages on account of the loss of his sheep & cattle so poisoned, the claim in respect of the steers being made in the suit by arrangement:—Held: (1) the claim for the losses which occurred in A.'s life, if ever sustainable, was one in respect of an injury to property coming within Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (c. 42), s. 2, & was made too late; (2) as to the claim for the loss of the steers, there was no obligation thrown by the law upon a landlord as between himself & his tenants to keep up his fences, & the trustees were not liable. Semble: the claim for the losses which occurred in A.'s life could not in any case have been sustained, for there was no implied warranty on the part of the lessor that his land was free from noxious plants.—*ERSKINE v. 417 i. Tree blown down by gale.]—Adjoining R.'s house and lot was land owned by S., & on which were a number of cedar trees in a state of semi-decay. R. warned S. of the dangerous condition of one of the trees that was within falling distance of his house, S. replying that R. was at liberty to cut the tree down if he wished to do so. The tree fell on R.'s house during a high of deft.'s lease, but while her gardener & her furniture were still allowed to remain on the premises, the upper part of another of the poplars was broken off by an exceptional gale & fell on pltf.'s stable & did damage. In an action for damages in respect of the second of these occurrences, there being no evidence of any decay in the poplars:—Held: there was no evidence of negligence & deft. was not liable.—*BRUCE v. 423. — Compensation—Compulsory enfranchisement—Valuation.—The lord of a manor has rights in respect of the timber on the copyhold properties, for which rights he was upon a commutation under Enfranchisement of Copyholds Act, 1841 (c. 35), & is upon an enfranchisement under Copyhold Acts, 1852 (c. 51) & 1853 (c. 94), entitled to compensation.

There was a custom in a manor entitling the lord to one-third part of the timber growing on the lands of the manor. On proceedings by the lord against the tenant for enfranchisement under Copyhold Acts:—Held: (1) by the general law apart from custom, the lord of the manor had rights in respect of the timber, for which he was on enfranchisement entitled to compensation; (2) it was the exclusive province of the copyhold comrs. to determine whether the custom was proved, & the ct. would not interfere with their decision; (3) the lord was entitled to compensation for his rights as to timber under the custom. — REYNOLDS v. WOODHAM WALTER (1872), L. R. 7 C. P. 639; 41 L. J. C. P. 281; 27 L. T. 374; 36 J. P. 806.

424. Lord's remedy against copyholder.—By the custom of a manor, the lord & tenant had a joint interest in all oak trees, the body of the tree up to the first main bough belonging to the lord & the tenant being entitled to the lop, top & bark of such oak trees & to oak timber by assignment. Deft., a tenant, claimed oak timber for firebote, which was refused, & then cut timber without consent of the lord:—Held: the lord not entitled to an injunction against the tenant. Semble: the lord could not bring trover against the tenant for the timber when cut, but he might have an action for the proceeds due to him.—DENCH v. BAMPTON (1799), 4 Ves. 700; 31 E. R. 362.

Noble* (1807), 3 Mer. 673, the principle on which Lord Loughborough proceeded has never been considered a sound one, namely, that the only remedy of the lord for waste done by the tenant in cutting timber without licence or custom is at law for the forfeiture (LORD BROUGHAM, C.). Consd. Blackmore v. 427. — Right to timber cut by copyholder—Cutting by underlessee.—If a copyholder for life cuts timber trees, the lord may take them; if the underlessee for years of a copyholder cuts timber, it is not a forfeiture of the copyhold estate.—CAGE v. DOD (1650), Sty. 233; 82 E. R. 672.

428. Inclosure.—The parish & manor of Hanley, & all the messuages, lands, & tenements mentioned in a special award, were from time immemorial within Cranbourne Chase, & so continued until the chase was disfranchised; & in the seventeenth year of Queen Elizabeth's reign, the lord of the manor, & the owner of certain woods & coppices, whose estate A. then had, granted several leases of the same messuages, lands, & tenements, then held by D. & P. respectively, for the term of one thousand years, with common of pasture as appurtenant thereto, for certain beasts over & upon the woods & coppices, to be used & enjoyed in the manner then accustomed by others having common of pasture over same for the like commonable cattle. The right of common then accustomed was from May 12 to Nov. 22, except only such part of the woods wherein the owner or occupier thereof, from time to time, at his free will & pleasure, cut down the wood & underwood, which parts so cut down the owner or occupier was accustomed to inclose with a fence to preserve the growth of the wood & underwood therein, & thereby excluded all beasts therefrom until the end of three successive years from the time of such cutting, when the deer of the chase were admitted into the woods & coppices, & all other beasts, until the end of four successive years from the time of such cutting, when the commonable cattle were admitted. The lessees, their tenants, etc., had used & enjoyed common of pasture in the woods & coppices. The question was, whether the owner of the woods was entitled to inclose the coppices & woods, so from time to time to be cut down, & exclude therefrom all the commonable cattle for seven successive years, for preservation of the wood & underwood:—Held: (1) the owner of the woods was not so entitled; (2) 22 Edw. 4, c. 7, did not apply to woods wherein rights of common existed; (3) 35 Hen. 8, c. 17, s. 8, only applied to woods in which immemorial rights of common existed, not to rights of common claimed by grant.—DIBBEN v. ANGLESEA (MARQUIS), ANGLESEA (MARQUIS) v. DIBBEN (1834), 10 Bing. 568; 2 Cr. & M. 722; 4 Tyr. 926; 4 L. J. Ex. 278; 149 E. R. 951.

429. Copyholder's possessory interest.—A copyholder has only possessory property in timber trees, & where his possession is gone his property is gone. 432. Rights of tenant for life or years—Custom bad.—A custom that every copyhold tenant may cut down trees at his pleasure is unreasonable & void.

In an action for trespass for cutting down elm trees, brought by the lord of a manor, deft. justified as copyholder for life, for that infra manerium usitalum fuit a tempore, etc., to cut down & carry away at his pleasure any elms growing upon the tenements, & showed that he was tenant for life, etc.:—Held: (1) the custom was unreasonable that a copyholder for life should cut down timber trees which by intendment had not their growth in his time, & by that means the succeeding copyholder should not have any for his use to repair his house; (2) as it was pleaded quod quilibet tenens custodarius of any customary tenement, etc., & deft. did not say de quel estate, it was too large & unreasonable for any one who had but for a month, or at will, that he might by that custom cut down trees; (3) pltf. entitled to judgment.—POWEL v. ELLIOT (1788), 2 Term Rep. 746; 100 E. R. 402.

440. Copyholder for life with power to nominate successor.]—A custom in a manor that a copyholder for life may name to the lord of the manor who should be his successor is good; a custom that such copyholder may cut down all the trees growing upon the customary land is good, but must be construed reasonably, notwithstanding he leave sufficient for housebote, for excess shall not be allowed. Such copyholder has power to make another estate for life & has as good privilege as tenant after possibility, & has a greater estate than a bare tenant for life who cannot be warranted by custom to do such an act.

Trees growing are parcel of the inheritance.

Where there is a lease for years excepting the wood, & the lessor afterwards grants the trees, & the lease determines, the lessor shall not have the trees again.—ROWLES v. MASON (1612), 2 Brownl. 85, 192; 123 E. R. 829, 892; sub nom. ROLLES v. MASON (1609), 1 Brownl. 132.

446. ———. Devisee for life of copyholder of inheritance.]—Where a copyholder of inheritance, having power by custom to cut timber, surrendered to the use of his will, & devised to A. for life without impeachment of waste, with remainders over:—Held: though there was no instance in fact of a copyholder for life in the manor cutting timber, yet, the right being annexed to the fee & inheritance, the copyholder in fee in carving out his estate might make a tenant for life dispunishable for waste, & the lord could not enter upon the copyholder for life's estate, as for a forfeiture upon his cutting timber, for the injury, if any, was to the remainderman of the inheritance.—DENN d. JODDRELL v. JOHNSON (1808), 10 East, 266; 103 E. R. 776.

447. Lopping off boughs—Custom.]—The question being whether a copyholder might lop off boughs without a special custom:—Held: by the common law he might cut off the under boughs which could not cause any waste, but the amputation of the top boughs would cause the putrefaction of the whole tree, wherefore that was waste as well as the decapitation thereof.—DAWBRIDGE v. 464. — Grant of woods to copyholder—Merger.]—A copyholder in fee in a manor, where by custom the lord had as a profit à prendre the cut of the woods & underwoods on the copyhold, obtained a grant of all the woods & underwoods growing & which afterwards should grow on the lands to him & his heirs:—Held: this did not merge in the copyhold.—FAWLKNER v. FAULKNER (1681), 1 Vern. 21; 23 E. R. 276.

465. Special agreement—Evidence of usage & reputation.]—By agreement between the lord & certain customary tenants within the manor, the tenants covenanted for themselves & their heirs or assigns not to cut down, sell or dispose of any wood standing or growing or thereafter to stand or grow without the lord's licence, & the lord covenanted to set out yearly upon request from the tenants sufficient for repair of their houses & other necessary uses in & about the tenements, & that the tenants might cut down, use & dispose of any wood planted by themselves & their heirs on the tenements for such purposes:—Held: (1) deft., tenant of one of the customary tenements comprised in the agreement, was not entitled without licence to cut down & sell wood planted on the tenement by a tenant since the agreement; (2) the lord might maintain trover against the tenant for wood so cut; (3) evidence that the tenants of deft.'s estate for thirty years & upwards had publicly, & without interruption from the lord & with his knowledge, cut & sold the planted wood in large quantities was admissible; (4) evidence of reputation that tenants of deft.'s estate had the right of cutting & selling planted wood was inadmissible.—BLACKETT v. LOWES (1814), 2 M. & S. 494; 105 E. R. 465.

466. Relief from forfeiture for cutting.]—A., having two copyholds in the manor of B., cut timber on one & employed it in repairing the other. There was no custom so to do. The lord of the manor obtained a verdict on ejectment for forfeiture. The timber was of small value:—Held: pltf. might be relieved against the forfeiture, on payment of costs of all the trials & paying the fees of re-admission, but no fine.—*NASH v. Such a copyholder may have an action against the lord if he cuts the trees, for by so doing he destroys the very thing for which the tenant prescribes. He that has common of estovers may bring case against the owner of the land for distraining the trees. The above prescription has been good for a copyholder by life.—*CROSSE v. 474. Trees cut by purchaser before surrender.]—The purchaser of a small copyhold estate before surrender to him entered on the premises, cut down the timber, & did everything as owner. There was no custom giving the tenant power to cut down the timber. The vendor, who had covenanted to surrender on or before a certain date, gave notice in writing that he would surrender on the next ct. day. The vendor suing for specific performance, on behalf of the purchaser it was alleged that he was disordered in his senses & that the sale of the timber was an imposition on the purchaser:—Held: (1) the purchaser's cutting down of timber was a convincing proof of his folly because it was a direct forfeiture; (2) it was merely a matter at law & the suit must be dismissed.—EDWARDS v. HEATHER (1724), Cas. temp. KING, 3; 25 E. R. 190.

485. —.].—A person who had no interest sued for a prohibition to restrain a bishop & his tenant from committing waste by cutting timber in lands, parcel of the possessions of the bishopric:—Held: the Ct. of Common Pleas had no power to issue such a writ, at all events at the suit of such an uninterested person. Semble: even if the Ct. of King's Bench could grant such a writ at the suit of the Crown, they could not grant it at the suit of any one.—JEFFERSON v. 486. Dean & Chapter.].—A dean & chapter have not the power of cutting timber on their lands except for repairs of their property, & cannot give any such right to a lessee. Even if they possessed such a right, & a lease of "woods, groves, hedgerows, & springs [describing them] & all the trees, woods, & underwoods growing, etc., or that hereafter shall grow, etc., within & upon the woods, etc.," could be construed as transferring the right to the lessee:—Semble: a ct. of equity would not carry such a transaction into effect.—HERRING v. ST. PAUL'S (DEAN & CHAPTER) (1819), 3 Swan, 492; 2 Wils. Ch. 1; 36 E. R. 949.

487. —.].—Defts. demised to pltf. a mansion-house with a reservation to the lessors of timber trees, with the right to cut & carry away same & a covenant by defts. not to sell or take any timber trees growing or to grow on a specified part of the premises save for necessary building or repairs of certain church buildings. The lessee filed a bill to restrain defts. from selling or cutting except for such purposes, & obtained an interim injunction. On defts. showing that the whole of the timber cut was needed for the purpose of repairs, the injunction was dissolved on the ground that the covenant did not extend to deprive them of the right which they might have exercised independently of it:—Held: deans & chapters, like other ecclesiastical persons, were not liable to be restrained in cases of waste either by prohibition or injunction except in the Ecclesiastical Ct. or at the suit of the Crown. Semble: the right to cut timber for the purpose of repairs extended to selling timber & applying the produce.—WITHER v. 490. Rector.].—A patron of a living was granted an injunction against a rector from cutting down timber so as to commit waste.

A rector may cut down timber for the repairs of the parsonage or the chancel, or for repairing any old pews belonging to the rectory, but not for any other purpose. If it is the custom of the country, he may cut underwood for any purpose; but if he grubs it up, it is waste. He is also entitled to botes for repairing barns & outhouses belonging to the parsonage (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).—STRACHY v. FRANCIS (1741), 2 Atk. 217; 26 E. R. 534.

491. — Application for injunction—In whose name.]—In the circumstances of Strachy v. Francis, No. 490, ante, the application for an injunction need not be in the name of the A.-G.—BRADLY v. STRACHY (1740), Barn. Ch. 399; 27 E. R. 695.

492. —.]—A rector is justified in cutting timber growing on the glebe, provided he specifically applies it to repairs of the rectory house & buildings on the glebe. The circumstance that the rector had applied a much larger sum in the repairs of the rectory house than the proceeds of the sale of timber cut by him:—Held: not a defence to a case made against him of cutting & selling timber in a suit by the patron. Semble: if the timber had been cut & sold merely for the purpose of providing other timber more suitable for repairs, the ct. would not have interfered by injunction. At common law, before 13 Eliz. cc. 10, 20, & 14 Eliz. cc. 11, 14, the parson, with the consent of the patron & ordinary, had unlimited power to dispose of timber; & at the present day the ct. would on a proper application direct timber to be cut & the produce to be applied for the benefit of the living. Semble: the rector has no more extensive privileges as to waste than an ordinary tenant for life.—MARLBOROUGH (DUKE) v. ST. JOHN (1852), 5 De G. & Sm. 174; 21 L. J. Ch. 381; 18 L. T. O. S. 252; 16 Jur. 310; 64 E. R. 1068.

Annotation:—Dbtd. Jefferson v. Durham (1797), 1 Bos. & P. 105. The report of Knowle v. Harvey is very loose & inaccurate; it is not stated on whose suggestion the prohibition was granted; probably it was at the instance of a party interested (HEATH, J.).

495. —.]—The purposes for which a vicar is entitled to cut timber are limited to proper & necessary repairs for the vicarage house, buildings & premises; he may not fell timber for the purpose of making a general repairing fund. Semble: where trees are far distant from the spot where they are wanted, the timber may be sold & similar materials purchased on the spot with the proceeds. Qu.: whether there is any rule that a patron is not entitled as against a rector or vicar, who has wrongfully cut timber, to an account.—*SOWERBY v. 496. Incumbent generally.]—The patron of a living may have an injunction against the incum-

499. Trees blown down in testator's lifetime—Quicquid plantatur solo solo cedit.]—In ascertaining whether trees blown down in the lifetime of the owner in fee belong to his personal representative or his heir or devisee, the test is not whether the trees remain alive or are dead, or whether they will continue to grow in the ordinary way, but whether or not the trees are severed. If severed, they are personal estate. The degree of severance of roots & filaments required is a question of fact in each case; substantial severance is sufficient.—*Re AINSLIE, SWINBURN v. The mtgee. brought an action for an injunction to restrain him. It was admitted that the security was insufficient in its then state. Pltf. produced evidence that the land might at some time be used as building land, & for that purpose the timber would increase its value. The mtgor. produced evidence that the chance of the land becoming building land was remote, that the trees were ready to cut, & would only deteriorate if left standing, & if they were cut down the land could be let in allotments at a higher rent. He offered to pay the money received by the sale in reduction of the mtgee. debt. The evidence as to deterioration of the timber by standing was contradicted :—Held : the mtgee. had a right to have the timber left standing on the land, & the injunction must be granted.—HARPER v. APLIN (1886), 54 L. T. 383.

Pltf. sued the mtgor. & his agent in respect of the receipt of rents of the mtged. estate, & obtained an order for a receiver. Before the receiver was appointed pltf. proceeded to cut timber on the estate. The mtgor.'s agent applied for an injunction against pltf. :—Held : (1) it was improper to cut timber after the order for the appointment of a receiver ; (2) appct., being a person appointed by the mtgor. to collect the rents, had no interest in the estate & no right to an injunction.—*HUNTER v. 519. —.—[In trespass for breaking & entering certain closes, deft. pleaded a lease of the tenements to pltf. & P. for their lives, & the life of the survivor, excepting the timber trees, etc., not being dotards, & then averred that pltf. & P. entered virtute, etc., & were & yet are seised, etc., that afterwards the lessor covenanted to stand seised of the tenements demised to the use of his son R. in tail, who being seised in tail of, etc., deft. by his command entered & showed the trees, & sold six of them to H. L. & W. L. Upon demurrer to this plea deft. had judgment, &:—Held: the trees, notwithstanding the exception, remained parcel of the inheritance of the land, & were not chattels, nor should go to exors., but should descend to the heir, if no conveyance were made of the reversion. When a lease of land is made, the lessee has but a special interest in the trees, as to have the mast & fruit of the trees & shadow for his cattle, etc., but the inheritance of the tree is in the lessor. If a wood, whereof a præcipe lies, was parcel of the manor of G., by a lease of the manor excepting woods, the soil itself is excepted; but by an exception of trees which grew upon land or pasture the soil itself is not excepted, but sufficient nutriment out of the land is reserved to sustain the vegetative life of the trees; & if the lessor fells them, or by the lessee's licence grubbs them up, the lessee shall have the soil. In the exception in the demise in the pleadings mentioned, five things were observed:—(1) The trees remained as parcel of the inheritance; (2) the soil itself was not excepted, but sufficient nutriment for the growth of the tree; (3) the lessee should have the pasture under the tree; (4) the lessor should have all the benefits of the tree; (5) the young of all birds that bred in the trees, & the fruit.

If tenant in tail sells the trees to another, they are a chattel in the vendee; but if tenant in tail dies before actual severance as to the issue in tail, they are parcel of the inheritance, & the vendee cannot take them. By a grant of the reversion the trees excepted in the demise pass as things annexed to the inheritance.

By the covenant to stand seised of the demised tenements, the inheritance of the whole land passed, & the trees being parcel of the inheritance, passed with it. When the lessor excepted the trees, & afterwards had an intention of selling them, the law gave him power as incident to the exception to enter & show the trees to those who would buy them.—LIFORD'S CASE (1614), 11 Co. 547. — Poles—Special agreement—Custom.]—Deft., tenant of a farm, held under an agreement, by the terms of which he was to cultivate the demised land in the same way & manner as P. had done, & "at all events, according to the rules of good husbandry as used & accustomed in the neighbourhood." P. had occupied immediately before deft., S. before P., & W. before S. In W.'s time certain poles growing were cut down & sold by him. S. had also, in his time, cut & sold poles, & a valuation of the poles had been made from S. to P. Deft. having, during his occupation, cut poles, an action was brought against him by his landlord for that act. The jury found that, by the custom of the neighbourhood, the poles were the landlord's, unless there was a special agreement on the subject. There was some evidence of the terms on which P. held. The judge omitted to leave to the jury upon what terms P. had held the farm:—Held: it ought to have been left to the jury to say what those terms were, & a new trial must be granted.—HOON (VISCOUNT) v. KENDALL (1855), 17 C. 551. — Seasonable.]—If a termor cuts down underwood of hazel, willows, maple, or oak which is seasonable, it is not waste.—GAGE & SMITH'S CASE (1613), Godb. 209; 22 Vin. Abr. tit Waste, E. pl. 3; 78 E. R. 127.

552. — When sporting rights reserved.]—In 1857 A. demised to B. a farm called U. Farm, containing 264 acres, about forty of which consisted of timber & underwood, with furze-covers in various other parts of the farm. This lease reserved to the lessor "all timber & other trees, mines, minerals, & quarries on the farm," & also "the exclusive right of shooting, fishing, & sporting on the farm," with liberty to the lessor, his servants, etc., & others by his authority, at all seasonable times to enter for any of the purposes contained in the reservations therein contained. In 1860 A. demised U. Castle & about 60 acres of land adjoining it to C., & also "the exclusive right of shooting & sporting over & taking the game, rabbits, & wild-fowl upon the premises & also upon the entire manor of U.," including the 260 acres under lease to B., reserving to the lessor "all trees, underwood, thorns, & bushes growing on the land, as well as all mines, minerals, & quarries," etc., with a covenant for quiet enjoyment, without interruption by the lessor or any person or persons lawfully claiming by, from, or under him, etc. B. cut all the underwood on his farm, & grubbed up & destroyed the furze covers, & thereby materially interrupted & injured C.'s right of sporting. There was no express covenant to keep up the cover:—Held: (1) there was no implied covenant not to grub up or destroy underwood; (2) as these acts on the part of B. were not warranted by the terms of the demise to him, they did not constitute a breach of A.'s covenant for quiet enjoyment in the lease of 1860.

Cutting underwood at due intervals is the only way to enjoy it; such cutting cannot be said to be a wilful destruction of the game (WILLES, J.).—JEFFRYES v. EVANS (1865), 19 C. B. N. S. 246; 34 L. J. C. P. 261; 13 L. T. 72; 11 Jur. N. S. 584; 13 W. R. 864; 144 E. R. 781.

But after such assignment, it is sufficient for the lessee, after ejectment brought by the assignee of the lessor for a forfeiture, to give such assignee notice to produce the original notice in writing of the intention to cut the whole, & he is not bound to show that he applied for same to the original lessor (who had left the country), or to his agents, or gave them notice to produce it; for it will be presumed to have been delivered up to the assignee of the reversion as a document relating to the estate; & on default of its production at the trial, he may give parol evidence of it.—*GOODTITLE v. 570. — Sale of trees cut, when justified.]—A lessee cut down trees & sold them:—Held: cutting trees for repairs was good, but if the lessee sold them before the repairs were made, the whole act became tortious; even if the lessee might take the trees back by gift or purchase or otherwise, & repair the house, although that might excuse waste to the house, it could not excuse waste in the trees.—ANON. (1466), Y. B., 5 Edw. 4, fo. 100b (Long Quinto).

571. — —.]—The sale of trees by a tenant for life or years is not waste, if his cutting & felling of them was not waste before. If the lessee cuts & sells timber trees, it is waste, but because of the cutting, not of the selling. If he cut for repairs & afterwards sell, it is waste, not for the selling only, but for the cutting, for the sale merely shows his ill-intent.—ANON. (1584), Godb. 28; 78 E. R. 18.

572. he then granted the manor in fee to L., who granted to pltf. The tenant put his cattle into the close for pasturage & they fed sometimes on the germens which began to grow in the close. In an action of trespass by pltf. against the lessee:—Held: (1) pltf. could not recover because the herbage & feeding belonged to the lessee, & the lessor or any one claiming under him could not hinder him by cutting the great trees; (2) since he could not use the pasturage without consuming the germens this was lawful.—*CLITHERO v. #### SUB-SECT. 10.—TENANT FOR LIFE AND REMAINDERMAN.

A. Impeachable for Waste.

585. General rule—Right to cut—Property in trees felled & proceeds.—Except in the case of a timber estate, a tenant for life impeachable for waste cannot fell timber. He can fell anything that is not timber, save trees planted for purposes of special utility or ornament, the germens of underwood, & trees which, though too young to be properly timber, would grow into timber. He may fell some, even of these last, if for the purpose of promoting the growth of other timber in the same wood. The property in timber, felled by a tenant for life, or any other person, or blown down by a storm, is in the owner of the first vested estate of inheritance, unless he has colluded with the tenant for life to induce him to fell it, in which case equity will not allow him to get the benefit of his own wrong. The property in trees not timber is in the tenant for life, & at law remains so, though he may have committed waste by felling them wrongfully, & made himself liable for an action of waste; but, qu. : if equity would allow him to take the property in trees felled thus. Where timber which is decaying, or which for any special reason requires to be felled, is felled with the sanction of the ct., the proceeds are invested & the income is given to the successive owners of the estate, till the fund is taken away by the owner of the first absolute estate of inheritance. The same course is adopted in cases of equitable waste, where ornamental trees have been felled.—HONYWOOD v. HONYWOOD (1874), L. R. 18 Eq. 306; 43 L. J. Ch. 652; 30 L. T. 671; 22 W. R. 749.

601. Trees cut in due course of management—Usage.]—A man made a feoffment in fee of a manor to the use of himself & his wife & his heirs, in which manor there were underwoods usually to be cut every twenty-one years. The husband having suffered the wood to grow twenty-five years & afterwards died, the question arose whether the wife as tenant for life might cut that underwood:—Held: (1) a tenant for life might cut all underwood which had been usually cut within twenty years, & in the wood countries might fell seasonable wood, which was called silva cardua, at twenty-six, twenty-eight & thirty years by the custom of the country; (2) while the cutting of oaks at the age of eight years or ten years was waste, the cutting of hornbeams, hazels, willows or sallows at the age of forty years was no waste, because at no time they would be timber.—ANON. (1581), Godb. 4; 78 E. 603. — Injunction — Timberlike trees — Breach.]—Deft., a tenant for life impeachable for waste, had been restrained by injunction from selling "any timber or timberlike trees" upon an estate. He advertised for sale a number of Scotch firs & larches grown thereon, some of which girthed 6 in.:—Held: "timberlike" did not go beyond timber, except so as to include trees which in due course of growth would become timber, & deft.'s act was not a breach of the injunction.—*LOWNDES v. 613. For public interest.—The reason why the common law gave so large a power to a tenant for life without impeachment of waste was for the interest of the public, as timber might thereby circulate for shipping & other uses (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).—PACKINGTON'S CASE (1744), 3 Atk. 215; 26 E. 614. — Where against public interest.—Where the commission of waste would be against the public interest, an injunction will lie even when the tenant is not impeachable for waste.—SKELTON v. SKELTON (1677), 2 Swan. 170, n.; 36 E. R. 579.

615. — Equitable tenant for life.—A widow, as equitable tenant for life without impeachment of waste, entered into possession of an estate, & continued in possession until her death. Upon the estate were extensive woods, consisting principally of beech trees (which, according to the custom of Buckinghamshire, were "timber"), besides other timber, such as oak, ash, & elm. During her lifetime she cut & sold large quantities of the timber, received the proceeds, & applied them to her own use, her annual income from this source being considerable. Immediately upon the widow's death the next tenant for life & remainderman under the uses of the will brought an action against her exors. seeking to make her estate liable, on the ground of "waste," for the timber so cut. It was proved that the mode of cutting by the widow was in accordance with local usage & with the practice of testator & his predecessors:—Held (CHITTY, J., & C. A., KAY, L.J., diss.): the widow had not committed waste in cutting the timber.

Evidence of modern usage as to a particular mode of cultivation of property is just as admissible in construing a devise as in construing a grant or lease (LINDLEY & BOWEN, L.J.J.).

There is no exception from the common law as to waste in favour of the limited owner of a "timber estate." A custom sufficient to control the common law as to waste in cutting down timber must be nothing less than an immemorial custom for a limited owner to commit such waste; mere modern usage or practice to that effect is insufficient (KAY, L.J.).

The doctrine of "waste," as applicable to the cutting of timber by a tenant for life of a freehold estate, the meaning of "timber estate," "timber," "seasonable wood," silva cædua, & "coppice," & the limitation of time in an action of waste, discussed.—DASHWOOD v. MAGNIAC, [1891] 3 Ch. 306; 60 L. J. Ch. 210, 809; 64 L. T. 99; 65 L. T. 811; 7 T. L. R. 189, 629, C. A.

616. Rights of tenant for life sans waste—Ornamental timber.—A tenant for life sans waste will not be interfered with in the exercise of his legal powers, unless he is proceeding to use those legal powers in a manner inequitable towards those in remainder; he may fell & sell trees planted for ornament, if done in a proper course of husbandry.—HALLIWELL v. PHILLIPS (1858), 4 Jur. N. S. 607; 6 W. R. 408.

617. — Timber cut by stranger.—A tenant for life without impeachment of waste became a bkpt. The comrs. of his estate sold his estate to deft. In an action by the tenant in tail in remainder against deft. to stay waste, an injunction as to cutting down ornamental timber was continued, but as to the cutting of timber generally was discontinued. If a stranger cut down timber, it belongs to the tenant for life without impeachment of waste, & not to the remainderman.—ANON. (1720), Mos. 237; 25 E. R. 369.

— Or other trees — Equitable waste.]

— See Nos. 887—921, post.

618. — Power to lease. A lessee for life without impeachment of waste & power to make leases for twenty-one years or three lives has interest in the trees as long as the estate continues. He has power to dispose of the trees, & may make a lease excepting the trees, but if he assign over his estate excepting the trees, the exception is void.

Such things which a man has by the law he cannot resign to himself upon his assignment, as the cropping & lopping of trees, as if tenant in tail after possibility, etc. (who is dispensable of waste by freedom of the law), assign over his estate reserving the trees, he cannot cut the trees, but here the lessee has a larger liberty than the law gives to him, & he by virtue of this may give away the trees; but I conceive that if he had assigned over all his estates, he could not have excepted the trees, but here he has not granted over all his estate, for he has a remainder, & may have an estate in possession afterwards, & upon this lease for three lives he may reserve a rent to himself (JONES, J.).

If a stranger cut the trees, lessee without impeachment of waste shall have them (per CUR.).

The question in dispute, which was not decided, was whether, after the death of the tenant for life, the remainderman could enter & cut the trees during currency of the lease granted by the tenant for life.—SECHEVEREL v. DALE (1627), Poph. 193; 79 E. R. 1285.

619. Tenant in remainder restrained.—By leave of the lessee of the tenant for life in possession a tenant for life in remainder without impeachment of waste came on the land & felled timber:—Held: although it was not growing for shelter or ornament, & no action could be maintained at law, he would be restrained in equity.—EVELYN'S (LADY) CASE (undated), cited in *ABRAHAM v. 622. Limitation of right by settlement.—A settlor settled a jointure on his wife for life without impeachment of waste, & on settling another part of his estates credited a term to secure a rentcharge to his wife, & out of the rents & profits to raise money to reimburse her the expenses in repairing her jointure estate. On a bill by a remainderman against the wife showing that she had cut down timber, even such as was not fit for repairs:—Held: (1) on the construction of the settlement, as she had cut timber without applying it to repairs, she could have no benefit of the term until she had reimbursed the proceeds of the timber she had unreasonably cut; (2) she should be restrained from cutting timber until further order.—*ASTON v. 623. Construction of devise—Exception—Limitation of.—A. by his will devised to B. & his assigns for his life all his real estates in W. without impeachment of waste, except the timber growing in the park avenues, demesne lands, & woods adjoining to the capital messuage called Arbury, remainder in trust for C. for life, remainder to his first & other sons in tail male:—Held: (1) the restriction as to cutting timber was confined to the premises specified in the exception clause, & ought not to extend to the woods adjoining to the excepted parts, nor to the avenues made by testator in those woods; (2) no proceeding for equitable waste could be maintained as to trees planted, etc., for ornament, etc.—NEWDEGATE v. NEWDIGATE (1834), 8 Bli. N. S. 734; 2 Cl. & Fin. 601; 5 E. R. 1113, H. L.

624. Rights under devise of rents & profits.—A testatrix devised the rents & profits of an estate to her husband for life without impeachment of waste. In a suit by the husband for an account:—Held: pltf. must hold the premises devised to him subject to the order of the ct., but must not fell timber without leave of the ct., unless for necessary repairs & botes.—*PARTRIDGE (PARTERICHE) v. 625. Liability to account.—The tenant for life without impeachment of waste of certain estates felled & converted to his own use certain timber growing thereon. The tenant in tail in remainder filed a bill to restrain the cutting of the timber & for an account of the timber already felled. The tenant for life refused to account on the ground that he was entitled to the timber in right of his interest in the estate:—Held: the evidence showing a considerable felling of trees, it was not unreasonable that pltf. should know what timber was felled, & the tenant for life must set forth the account.—NEWRY (VISCOUNT) v. KILMOREY (EARL) (1870), 24 L. T. 15; 19 W. R. 271.

626. Incidence of estate duty.—A tenant for life not impeachable for waste, who receives the proceeds of timber sold apart from the land, has to bear the duty thereon, & such duty is not, since Finance Acts, 1909-10 (c. 8), 1912 (c. 8), as prior thereto it was, a charge on the full value of the land including the value of the timber. Qu.: whether the general expression used in s. 61 (5) of the Act of 1910, & s. 9 of the Act of 1912, "the owners or trustees of such land," may not include a tenant for life, who has power to sell the timber & keep the proceeds.—*Re SMYTH, EDWARDS v. 627. Limited qualification—Rights under.—A settlor, by his marriage settlement, limited an estate to himself for life without impeachment of or for any manner of waste except spoil or destruction, or voluntary or permissive waste, or suffering buildings to go out of repair:—Held: (1) the tenant for life was in a position intermediate to that of an ordinary tenant for life & a tenant for life without impeachment of waste; (2) he might cut all timber (not ornamental) which an owner in fee, having a due regard to his own interest & the advantage of the estate, would cut, but no other.—VINCENT v. SPICER (1856), 22 Beav. 380; 25 L. J. Ch. 589; 27 L. T. O. S. 226; 2 Jur. N. S. 654; 4 W. R. 667; 52 E. R. 1154.

628. Voluntary waste excepted—Effect—Who can recover.—A. was tenant for ninety-nine years, if he should so long live, "without impeachment of waste, except voluntary waste," with remainder to trustees to preserve, etc., then to his first son in tail, with the reversion to B. in fee. A. having no son for a long while, sold timber, & divided the profits with B., the reversioner, by agreement between themselves. A. afterwards had a son:—Held: (1) A. was punishable for wilful waste, & had no interest in the timber, other than the mast & shade, & necessary botes; (2) the son as owner of the inheritance was entitled to recover what A. so received.—*GARTH v. 629. ———.—A testator empowered the persons becoming beneficially entitled to the estates settled by his will as & when in possession to fell such timber, except ornamental trees about a mansion house, as might be necessary for repairs. A tenant for life in remainder brought an action against the exors. of a previous tenant for life, who was also ultimate remainderman in fee, for felling & selling timber & applying proceeds to his own use:—Held: (1) the rule in Garth v. Cotton (No. 628, ante), that the first person entitled to an immediate estate of inheritance is the only person who can recover the value of timber cut improperly by a tenant impeachable for waste, & that where by fraudulent collusion between a tenant for life & the owner of the inheritance such timber is cut, the ct. will interfere notwithstanding the existence of a legal remedy, will not be applied, unless the ct. is satisfied that the facts did amount to a case of actual fraud & collusion; (2) the fact that a tenant in remainder allows a tenant for life to cut down timber in consideration & upon condition of the tenant for life laying out considerable sums of money in improvements for the benefit of the estate is no ground for inferring fraud; (3) the right of action, if any, arose on the death of the tenant for life & must be brought within six years of such death.—BIRCH-WOLFE v. BIRCH (1870), L. R. 9 Eq. 683; 39 L. J. Ch. 345; 23 L. T. 216; 18 W. R. 594.

631. Sale of underwood—Right to proceeds.]—Testator devised his estate to his wife for life, "with liberty to cut timber & underwood for her own use, but not to sell"; she cut underwood & sold it, & died:—Held: her estate was not accountable for the money produced to the next taker for life impeachable for waste, he having no property in the underwood till his estate came into possession.—PIGOT v. BULLOCK (1792), 1 Ves. 479; 3 Bro. C. C. 539; 30 E. R. 447.

632. Power of management.]—A testator by his will devised his estate to his wife, deft., for life, with remainder to P. in fee, & appointed deft. sole extrix. with full & absolute control over all testator's property during her life. P. died, having by his will settled the estate subject to deft.'s life interest on pltf. in tail male with remainder over. Deft. cut & sold timber, & an action was brought for a declaration that this constituted waste & for an injunction;—Held: (1) the will did not render deft. punishable for waste, but merely conferred on her large powers of management; (2) deft. had committed waste which did not fall within the exceptions in Honywood v. Honywood (No. 585, ante) & Dashwood v. Magniac (No. 615, ante); (3) pltf. was entitled to a declaration to this effect; (4) deft. was only entitled to cut timber in a due course of management for the benefit & preservation of the estate, & must account for the proceeds of sale that had taken place.—PARDOE v. PARDOE (1900), 82 L. T. 547; 16 T. L. R. 373; 44 Sol. Jo. 449.

D. Rights and Remedies of Remainderman.

633. Right of remainderman in fee simple.]—A remainderman in fee simple expectant on determination of a life estate has the timber inheritance vested in him, but he has no present right to take & use it, & if he does so, trustees seised of the freehold may restrain him by injunction, & the owner of a prior estate of freehold may bring trespass against him for his entry & tortious act.—*GARTH v. 636. Remainderman not in esse at time when timber cut.]—A tenant in tail in remainder sued the exors. of a tenant for life for a declaration that the latter's estate was liable in respect of the cutting down of ornamental & other timber on the settled estates, the proceeds of which were applied for the tenant for life's own use. The timber was cut down & sold at times when the next vested estate of inheritance belonged to persons not parties to the action, since pltf. had been born since the tenant for life's death:—Held: (1) if timber was wrongfully cut by the tenant for life, the produce at once became the property at law of the owner of the first vested estate of inheritance, who might bring trover for it or file his bill in equity for an account; (2) a demurrer on the ground that pltf. was then the only person entitled to sue was overruled.—Re CAVENDISH, CAVENDISH v. MUNDY, [1877] W. N. 198.

637. Mesne remainderman's interest.]—Where A. is tenant for life, remainder to his children, & B. has an interest in the growing timber, which, in the usual course of management, will come to be felled during the continuance of A.'s estate, the infants can have no interest in, & cannot be made parties to, an agreement between A. & B. for the purchase of B.'s interest in the growing timber.—ANON. (1822), 1 L. The remainderman for life needing money, timber was felled on the estate by A. for the purpose. Deft. brought an action to recover damages for waste. Deft. had notice of the intention to cut timber & made no complaint for ten years:—Held: deft. would be restrained by injunction from bringing the action of waste. Semble: timber blown down or cut by a stranger vests in the person having the first vested estate of inheritance.—*ASTON v. first, etc., sons in tail, reversion in fee to A. A. cut down timber, against whom B. brought his bill for an injunction to stay waste :—Held : though B. had no right to the timber, yet as he had an interest in the mast & shade, if A. should die without sons, & as B. could not maintain an action, not having the immediate remainder, the injunction should be continued.—*PERROT v. On a bill by his creditors he was restrained from selling ; afterwards the creditors obtained an order for sale, & a receiver was appointed for the money arising from the sale. The tenant for life died before the timber was felled. The question being whether his representatives were entitled to the benefit of the timber :—Semble : the ct. would not allow its own act to deprive him of the benefit.—*PARTRIDGE v. A., being also seised of the reversion in fee, cut & sold timber before the birth of a tenant in tail ; afterwards B. had a son, who died soon after his birth, & another son, who survived A. :—Held : the produce of the timber must be laid out in the funds during the life of A., & upon his death without having had a son must be laid out in land, to be settled to the uses of the estate, upon which the timber was cut.—POWLETT v.

653. Tenant for life sans waste subject to devise to trustees to sell & pay debts.]—Devise to trustees, in trust to sell for payment of testator's debts, & subject thereto to A. for life sans waste, remainder to his first & other sons in tail. 655. Tenant for life acquiring base fee.]—No action lies by the reversioner & owner of the inheritance to recover the value of timber cut by the deceased tenant for life after a fine levied by her, whereby she acquired a base fee, & before the avoidance of such fine & base fee by the entry of the reversioner for that purpose, such entry not revesting the reversioner's old estate by relation during continuance of the base fee thus created, so as to entitle him at law to the timber & other mesne profits taken during that interval. Even supposing that after Stat. Limitations had run against the appropriate action, by the reversioner against the tenant for life, for mesne profits or for waste, upon the original wrongful act of cutting down & converting the trees, an action of assumpsit for money had & received for the purchase-money of the trees sold, which was in fact paid to the former tenant for life within the six years, was maintainable against her representatives after her death.—*HUGHES v. corpus of the estate, the tenant for life, though impeachable for waste, receiving the income; (3) the proceeds of timber improperly cut, at a time when there is no person in esse unimpeachable for waste, must be similarly dealt with, except that the tenant for life so improperly acting cannot receive the income; (4) the proceeds of timber improperly cut by a tenant for life impeachable of waste, at the time when there is in existence a remainderman entitled indefeasibly to the first estate unimpeachable for waste, belong absolutely to such remainderman.

659. Timber cut in due course of management.—An equitable tenant for life impeachable for waste cut timber not otherwise than in due course of management. The proceeds had been brought into ct. & the income ordered to be paid to her. On her death her son, being the next tenant for life dispensable for waste, petitioned for payment to him of the timber money in ct.:—Held: he was entitled to the money, as he would have been entitled to the trees which produced it.—*LOWNDES v. 660. Sale under settlement—Timber cut—Application of proceeds.—Previous to the coming into operation of Settled Land Act, 1882 (c. 38), & during the minority of the tenant for life, the trustees of a settlement, dated in 1856, sold timber under the powers of the settlement, the proceeds being applied under the settlement as money derived from the sale of the estates:—Held: the proceeds were applicable under the provisions of the settlement, the infant tenant for life not being impeachable for waste.—Re NEWCASTLE'S (DUKE) ESTATE (1883), 31 W. 661. Power in settlement to cut timber—Right to proceeds of sale of uncut timber.—A tenant for life of land settled by a will had power to cut & sell timber, which had begun to decay or which injured the underwood, & to apply the proceeds to his own use. The will also contained a power for the trustees at the direction of the tenant for life to sell the estate or any part thereof. In 1881 a sale was contemplated, but the remainderman brought an action to restrain it, which in 1884 was dismissed with costs. In 1885 the tenant for life sold the estate under Settled Land Acts, 1882 (c. 38) & 1884 (c. 18), one of the conditions of sale being that the purchaser should pay for the timber at a valuation. At the time of the sale there was standing timber on the estate which had begun to decay. The tenant for life claimed to be paid out of the purchase-money so much as represented the decaying timber, & also, under s. 35 of the Act of 1882, one-fourth of the residue of the purchase-money realised by the sale of the timber:—Held: the claim failed, on the ground that so long as the timber was standing it formed part of the inheritance, & the tenant for life was not absolutely entitled within s. 21 (9) of the above Act.—Re LLEWELLIN, LLEWELLIN v. WILLIAMS (1887), 37 Ch. D. 317; 57 L. J. Ch. 316; 58 L. T. 152; 36 W. R. 347; 4 T. L. R. 170.

663. — Commencement of tenancy.—An estate was devised to A. for life, with remainder to trustees to preserve, with contingent remainders in tail male to A.'s male issue, with like remainders in favour of B. & his male issue, with like remainders in favour of C. & his male issue, with remainder to D. for life without impeachment of waste, with remainder to his male issue in tail male. A. was in possession from 1818 to Mar. 1855, when he died without issue male; B. was then in possession till May, 1856, when he died without issue male; C. died in B.'s lifetime, & D. entered upon B.'s death, never having had any male issue up to the date of the bill. In 1820 A. cut timber, & the proceeds were invested in the names of the trustees to preserve, & the income paid to A. & the successive tenants for life for the time being. In 1848 A. again cut timber, the proceeds of which were received by him in 1854, & paid to the trustees by A.'s exors. in 1857. In 1856 B. cut timber & received the proceeds, which were, in 1857, paid by his exors. to the trustees. The amounts of the proceeds were agreed, & D. thereupon filed his bill to have all the capital of the timber money paid to him, & also to be paid by the exors. of A. & B. the income of the timber money of 1820, received by them respectively from the trustees. The bill alleged that the heir of testator could not be ascertained:—Held: (1) if the timber were rightfully cut, D. had no title to the income before commencement of his own tenancy; (2) if it were wrongfully cut, the remedy, if any, was in the first instance by trover, & afterwards by action for money had & received. Qu.: as to the relative rights of the heir & the remainderman for life without impeachment of waste, in respect of timber wrongfully cut by a previous tenant.—GENT v. HARRISON (1859),

O. had a child who died almost immediately. Before any other contingent remainderman came in esse, B. cut down timber, his own remainder in fee being the next existent estate of inheritance, but afterwards O. had another child:—Held: B. could not take advantage of his own wrong by taking the timber so cut, nor was the second child of O. entitled until it could be seen whether B. would have a child, but the produce should be paid into ct. by B. with interest at 4 per cent., & accumulate for the benefit of such person as should appear at the death of B. to have title to it.—WILLIAMS v. 669. — Lands incumbered with debts—Decree as to proceeds.]—A. devised lands incumbered with debts to B. for life, remainder to C. in fee. B. cut down timber from the estate. B. was decreed to pay two-fifths of the debts, & C. the remaining three-fifths, & B. to account for the timber which he had cut, & this to be taken as part of the three-fifths, which the remainderman was to pay.—JAMES v. HALES (1692), 2 Vern. 267; 23 E. R. 773.

670. Tenant unimpeachable for waste—Fiduciary position—Collusive agreement.]—G. being seised in fee by will devised lands to B., father of pltf., for ninety-nine years, if he should so long live, without impeachment of waste, voluntary waste excepted, on condition he took the name of G., & from & after determination of that estate, to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, with remainder to his first & other sons in tail, with other mesne remainders over which determined soon after testator's death, with an ultimate remainder to C., deft.'s grandfather. Pltf.'s father entered & took the name of G. He made through his attorney an agreement with C. that there should be an inspection & marking of timber fit to be cut, & that the parties should agree which marked trees should be cut & sold. The proceeds of sale were to be applied in payment of testator's debts & the residue was to be divided into equal moieties between pltf.'s father & C.; it was provided also that the death of pltf.'s father without issue male or having issue male should make no alteration in the terms. In pursuance of this agreement timber was cut, in respect of which C. received £1,000. Ten years afterwards pltf. was born; on his attaining twenty-one years of age he disentailed the estate & three years afterwards sued C. for an account of the sum so received by him. C. died pending suit which was revived against his exors., defts.:—Held: (1) pltf.'s father was in a fiduciary position as regarded pltf. to see that the timber was preserved; (2) the timber not being applicable under the will for payment of testator's debts, the stipulations in the agreement were collusive & fraudulent as against pltf.; (3) the value of the timber must be secured & laid out in land for the benefit of pltf.; (4) the delay of thirty-four years was not laches to be imputed to pltf.; (5) the disentail by pltf. did not affect his right; (6) the right to an account for the cutting did not die with the person of C.—GARTH v. 681. ——Larch trees—Sale by trustees—Application of proceeds.—An estate which comprised larch plantations was settled as personalty by the medium of trustees for sale. The trustees had power to pay all outgoings, & to determine what part of the property was corpus & what income. A large number of trees were blown down by extraordinary gales, & the plantations were so much injured that it became necessary to clear & replant the ground. The income from the plantations was derived from thinnings, & varied considerably according to the age of the trees. The trees blown down were about thirty-five years old, & in ordinary course would have come to full maturity in fifteen or twenty years, & they would then have been cut down & the ground cleared & replanted:—Held: (1) the proceeds of the sale of the larch trees blown down & felled by reason of the gales did not belong to the equitable tenant for life, but must be invested by the trustees; (2) the ct., having regard to the average income which would have been derived from the plantations if no gales had occurred, fixed an annual sum to be paid to the tenant for life out of the income, & if necessary, the capital of the invested fund, subject to the right of the trustees to have recourse to the fund in order to replant the plantations.—Re HARRISON'S TRUSTS, *HARRISON v. 697. Rights unaffected by collateral powers.]—A private Act empowered trustees, with the consent of persons in possession or entitled to rents & profits of settled estates, to cut timber, the produce to be laid out in the purchase of other lands to be settled to the same uses. The first tenant in tail being a lunatic, timber was cut & sold during his lunacy by authority of the committee of his estate, who was also a trustee under the private Act:—Held: (1) the Act did not affect the rights of the tenant in tail to cut at common law; (2) the produce of the timber was to be taken as personal estate & belonged to the lunatic's estate, & not to the heir-at-law.—Ex p. CLAYTON (1830), 1 Russ. & M. 639; 39 E. R. 143.

698. —.]—A will, after restraining each tenant for life from cutting timber, gave power to the exors. at any time afterwards, until some person entitled in possession to an estate tail should attain twenty-one years, to cut timber & invest the proceeds in the purchase of land to be settled to the uses of the will:—Held: whether the power was imperative or permissive only, it was void in so far as it was in derogation of the rights of the infant tenant in tail, as being within the rule against perpetuities.—*FERRAND v. 704. —.]—A woman tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct was restrained from committing waste in cutting down trees, which stood in defence of the house, & fruit trees in the garden; but for some turrets of trees, which stood a land's length or two from the house, the ct. would grant no injunction, because she had by law power to commit waste, & yet notwithstanding, she was restrained in the particulars aforesaid because that seemed to be malicious.—ANON. (1704), Freem. The wife survived the husband, & had no issue, & after possibility of issue by the husband extinct :—

Held : (1) she was tenant in tail after possibility, etc.; (2) she was unimpeachable for waste, & entitled to the property of the timber when cut by her.—WILLIAMS v. WILLIAMS (1810), 12 East, 209; 104 E. R. 81.

706. Tenant in tail restrained from barring issue.]—Held : the Duke of Marlborough for the time being, was, under 5 Anne, c. 3, bound to maintain Blenheim House, & was not, therefore, at liberty to cut trees, which were essential to its ornament or shelter.

A tenant in tail, restrained by stat. from barring issue & those in remainder, is not, for that reason, within the principle of equitable waste.—A.-G. v. MARLBOROUGH (1816), 3 Madd. 498; 56 E. R. 588.

707. Express restriction on cutting on all tenants in tail is invalid.]—MILDMAY v. MILDMAY, No. 819, post.

708. Restriction on cutting timber for specified period determined by barring entail.]—A testator bequeathed a sum of stock upon trust during a specified period to lay out the dividends in repairing the houses on two farms, it being his desire that on no account should the timber of such farms be cut down during a specified period, on pain that the person so cutting such timber should lose all interest in the estates as if he were dead, & upon trust to pay the surplus of the dividends equally among the persons for the time being in possession of the estates under his will during continuance of the trust, & immediately after expiration thereof to transfer the fund in moieties to persons in possession of the farms respectively. Testator then devised each of the farms to the trustees in strict settlement. The tenants for life & their eldest sons barred the entail in the farms & resettled same, & applied for payment out of ct. of the fund, before the end of the period :—Held : (1) the restriction against cutting timber had been determined by barring the entail; (2) the fund being intended for the benefit of the persons barring the entail, the period for enjoyment of the capital of the fund had been accelerated by barring the entail.—Re COLSON'S TRUSTS (1853), Kay, 133; 2 Eq. 709. Malicious waste.]—Defts. were tenants in tail in possession & pltf. tenant in tail in remainder of a settled estate. On an application by pltf. showing that defts. were stripping the land of trees for the supposed purpose of destroying the value of pltf.'s property, an injunction was granted to restrain the cutting of timber or timberlike trees on the estate.—NEALE v. #### SUB-SECT. 14.—TENANTS OF TIMBER ESTATES.

710. Timber estates—Exception to general rule.]—To the rule that a tenant for life impeachable for waste cannot cut down timber trees there is an exception in favour of owners of timber estates, that is, estates which are cultivated merely for the produce of saleable timber & where the timber is cut periodically (JESSEL, M.R.).—HONYWOOD v. HONYWOOD (1874), L. R. 18 Eq. 306; 43 L. J. Ch. 652; 30 L. T. 671; 22 W. R. 749.

timber & to preserve such woods, I see no reason to dissent from him; but if he intended to go further, he may have gone too far (LINDLEY, L.J.); Pardoe v. Pardoe (1900), 82 L. T. 547.

711. Right to cut in due management.]—As between tenant for life & remainderman in a question of waste of an estate, which was almost all woodland:—Held: the tenant for life entitled to cut timber fit & proper to be cut & felled in the course of a due & husbandlike management of the woods.—BRIDGES v. STEPHENS (1817), 2 Swan. 170; 36 E. R. 575.

712. Periodical cutting.]—A tenant for life under a will of an estate, upon which were extensive woods consisting principally of beech trees, during her life annually cut & sold a large quantity of the beech trees, together with a small quantity of oak, elm, & ash growing in the woods, & applied the proceeds to her own use. The tenant for life had no express power to cut timber except for repairs, & by the custom of the county beech was timber. It was proved that the mode of cutting adopted by the tenant for life was in accordance with local usage & with the practice of testator & his predecessors:—Held (KAY, L.J., diss.): the tenant for life had not committed waste in cutting the timber, & was entitled to the proceeds.—DASHWOOD v. MAGNIAC, [1891] 3 Ch. 306; 60 L. J. Ch. 809; 65 L. T. 811; 7 T. L. R. 629, C. A.

713. — Rents & profits.]—By a marriage settlement made in 1902 personal property of the wife was settled upon usual trusts, the wife taking the first life interest, & power was given to the trustees to sell any part of the trust premises & invest the proceeds in purchase of freehold lands to be conveyed to the trustees upon trust for sale, & until sale the trustees were to pay rents & profits to the person to whom the income of the trust premises invested in the purchase thereof would have been payable, if such investment had not been made. In 1904 the trustees exercised this power & purchased an estate in the county of Buckinghamshire, having a large number of beech trees on it. In the proper management of the estate the trustees had recently cut & sold a number of beech trees:—Held: the proceeds of sale arising from periodical cuttings, after deducting the expense of replanting & fencing incurred in a proper course of management, were not "profits" of the estate within the settlement, & payable to the tenant for life.—Re TREVOR-BATYE'S SETTLEMENT, BULL v. TREVOR-BATYE, [1912] 2 Ch. 339; 81 L. J. Ch. 646; 107 L. T. 12; 56 Sol. Jo. 615.

SUB-SECT. 15.—TRUSTEES AND EQUITABLE TENANTS FOR LIFE, ETC.

714. Interest passing—Right to cut.]—A testator devised his real estates to trustees in fee in trust for certain persons in succession, & bequeathed his personal estate to the trustees in trust for certain other persons in succession. He directed that the timber or wood which should be upon his real estates should be from time to time made use of for repairing the houses thereon or otherwise for the benefit & advantage of his estates, or that same should be sold & the proceeds applied in the same manner as his personal estate:—Held: (1) the devise of the real estates carried the underwood; (2) the trustees, leaving sufficient timber on the estate for repairs, might cut down such timber as was of proper growth & not standing for shelter or ornament, but were not entitled to cut underwood.—BUTLER v. BORTON (1820), 5 Madd. 40; 56 E. R. 809.

Annotations:—Consd. Silvester v. Bradley (1842), 13 Sim. 75. Mentd. Hughes v. Eades (1842), 11 L. J. Ch. 297.

715. — — — When it ceases.]—In the circumstances of Butler v. Borton (No. 714, ante):—Held: the direction or trust respecting timber & wood on the estates was not perpetual, but ceased on the inheritance vesting in possession in adult persons.—SILVESTER v. BRADLEY (1842), 13 Sim. 75; 11 L. J. Ch. 365; 60 E. R. 29.

716. Trust to raise fund—Onus of charge & interest—Tenant for life & remainderman.]—Limitation of estates to successive tenants for life, with remainders in tail, subject to a term vested in trustees, the trusts of which were, in the first place, by cutting & selling timber of full growth, or by demising, mtgng., or selling the estate (except the mansion house) for all or any part of the term, or by all or any of the ways or any other reasonable ways, to raise £30,000, & pay same to the parties therein mentioned:—Held: (1) as between the tenants for life not impeachable for waste & the remaindermen, the corpus of the estate must bear the charge; (2) the interest of the charge must be paid by the tenant for life in possession, who, in the meantime, was entitled (as part of the profits of the estate) to the timber, which, as such tenant for life, he had a right to cut.

The trustees of the term in such a case have not an unlimited discretion to raise the charge in such manner as they may think fit; & it does not follow that, because their discretion in the mode of raising the charge has been honestly exercised, the charge will be left to be finally borne by those parties upon whom their act might chance to throw it. To a bill by one of the successive tenants for life under the limitation against the trustees of the term, & the tenant for life in possession, to restrain the trustees from raising the £30,000 by sale or mtge. of the estate until the timber of full growth (of which it was alleged that a large quantity was standing on the estate) had been cut & applied towards that purpose, demurrers were allowed.—MARKER v. KEKEWICH (1850), 8 Hare, 291; 19 L. J. Ch. 492; 14 Jur. 544; 68 E. R. 372.

Annotation:—Consd. Re Bute, Bute v. Ryder (1884), 27 Ch. D. 196.

717. — — — Discretionary power — Settlement.]—By a settlement certain estates, consisting of a mansion house & other premises, were limited to the use of trustees for a term of one thousand years without impeachment of waste, save only the cutting of ornamental timber, & subject to the term to the use of the settlor for life without impeachment of waste save as aforesaid, then to the use of A. B. & his assigns for life without impeachment of waste save as aforesaid, with divers limitations over. The trusts of the term were, in the first place, by cutting, felling, selling, & converting into money all or any part or parts of the timber standing & growing on the lands, which should be of full & ripe growth & not ornamental to the mansion or pleasure grounds attached thereto or any of the views or prospects of same, of which timber it was declared that enough of the most ornamental should always remain to preserve the beauty of the place unimpaired, or by demising, mtgng., or selling the premises comprised in the term or any part or parts thereof, save & except the mansion house & certain other premises therein mentioned, or by all or any of the ways & means to levy & raise the sum of £10,000 for the settlor, & after the death of the settlor in like manner to levy & raise two sums of £10,000 each for other parties:—Held: (1) the trustees had a discretionary power to enter on the estates & cut fit & proper timber, & apply the proceeds in discharge of the sums directed to be raised; (2) the ct. would protect them in the exercise of that power, there being an absence of all mala fides, or of any wanton or unreasonable exercise of discretion; (3) an injunction was granted at the suit of the trustees restraining A. B., the tenant for life in possession, from cutting the timber on the estates on the ground that his doing so would interfere with the discretionary power vested in the trustees.

Exemption from liability to waste annexed to a life estate is a special power in the tenant for life to appropriate part of the inheritance, & in this case:—Held: it was by the terms of the settlement made subordinate to the discretionary power conferred on the trustees.—KEKEWICH v. MARKER (1851), 3 Mac. & G. 311; 21 L. J. Ch. 182; 17 L. T. O. S. 193; 15 Jur. 687; 42 E. R. 280, L.C.

718. — Will—Sale.]—A testator by his will devised all his real estates to trustees for ninety-nine years without impeachment of waste, & subject thereto, to the use of his son for life without impeachment of waste, with remainder to the use of his granddaughter for life without impeachment of waste, with remainder to her first & other sons in tail, etc. The trustees of the term were, in the event of his personal estate being deficient, to raise money to pay debts & legacies. The will contained an express provision against cutting down any timber on the estates, except for necessary repairs, until the granddaughter should attain twenty-one, when the trustees were empowered to cut such timber “as they shall think fit,” & to sell & pay the proceeds to the granddaughter. The son entered into possession & died before the granddaughter attained twenty-one. She then became tenant for life. Some time afterwards, after she attained her majority, the trustees sold the term by auction in order to pay debts. It was stated in one of the conditions of sale that the estate was sold subject to any rights under the provisions in the will:—Held: (1) the will created no obligatory trust in favour of the granddaughter, but the power to cut was merely discretionary, to be exercised in a proper state of circumstances such as that of the granddaughter attaining twenty-one in her father’s lifetime; (2) the purchaser was entitled to timber standing at the time of sale.—WATLINGTON v. WALDRON (1853), 4 De G. M. & G. 259; 23 L. J. Ch. 713; 22 L. T. O. S. 207; 18 Jur. 317; 2 W. R. 120; 43 E. R. 506, L.C. & L.JJ.

719. — Settlement by reference.]—The trustees of a settlement had vested in them (inter alia) a power to cut timber, but had no legal estate except to preserve contingent remainders. The first tenant for life devised his own estates to other trustees in fee simple, to the same uses & subject to like powers as the settled estates stood limited:—Held: the powers for the devised estates were exercisable by the trustees of the settlement, & not by the trustees of the will, who were mere conduit pipes for transfer of property passing by the will.—TAYLOR v. MILES (1860), 28 Beav. 411; 3 L. T. 115; 6 Jur. N. S. 1063; 54 E. R. 424.

720. Trustees taking estate pur autre vie—Property in trees cut down.]—Certain lands together with the woods were conveyed to plffs. under a marriage settlement, which the ct. construed as giving them an estate pur autre vie. Deft., a stranger, cut trees by order of the husband of the tenant for life & carried them away:—Held: plffs. could not claim trover against deft. for the trees, since, while they had a certain property in the trees while standing, that property ceased when they were cut down.—BLAKER v. ANSCOMBE (1804), 1 Bos. & P. N. R. 25; 127 E. R. 366.

721. Construction of trust deed as to cutting timber.]—A grant to trustees on a charitable trust prohibited the trustees from cutting timber for forty years except such as should be wanted for the necessary repairs of materials, etc., & other appurtenances belonging to the estate, & except certain slabs & tillers of oak as should be necessary for better selling the underwood, & after expiration of the forty years empowered the trustees to cut as they should think fit. On an information against the trustees:—Held: (1) the trustees were not restrained after expiration of forty years from cutting for purposes of repairs, nor from cutting timber on one part of the estate for repairs on another part, nor from selling timber when cut & applying the proceeds in necessary repairs, so long only as they cut no more timber on the whole property than the repairs on the whole property required; (2) the power of cutting slabs & tillers still continued with the qualifications annexed to it.—A.-G. v. GEARY (1817), 3 Mer. 513; 36 E. R. 197.

Administration of charitable property, see, generally, CHARITIES.

722. Cutting by cestui que trust—Consent of trustees.]—A testator devised an estate to trustees, giving them the legal estate, upon trust to pay the rents to or permit same to be received by A. for life with remainders over. A. took possession of the estate, & the trustees acquiesced for four years. A. cut timber which, it was alleged, was cut in proper management of the estate. In an action by the trustees to recover the deeds & receive the rents:—Held: (1) it was A.’s duty not to cut timber without the consent of the trustees; (2) he should not mix his own timber & timber belonging to the estate; (3) the proceedings by the trustees would be restrained on undertakings being given by him (inter alia) not to cut timber without their consent.—DENTON v. DENTON (1844), 7 Beav. 388; 3 L. T. O. S. 98; 8 Jur. 388; 40 E. R. 1115.

723. Estate purchased by trustees—Right of cestuis que trust.]—A residue was bequeathed in trust to be laid out in real estates, to be settled to the same uses as estates devised to the trustees for life successively without impeachment of waste, with various limitations in strict settlement, all the estates for life being without impeachment of waste, & the ultimate remainder in fee. The trustees laid out part of the fund in an estate with a considerable quantity of timber upon it:—Held: (1) taking that to be a sound exercise of discretion, the first tenant for life could not cut the whole; (2) equitable waste has not been extended beyond trees planted or growing for ornament, as in avenues or vistas, to timber merely ornamental, viz., an extensive wood. Qu.: whether, if the trustees were not by their character prevented from taking any benefit, the tenant for life might have any, & what proportion, of the timber, & how the excess was to be disposed of.—BURGES v. LAMB (1809), 16 Ves. 174; 33 E. R. 950.

724. Rights of equitable tenant for life.]—A tenant for life without impeachment of waste, in order to preserve the timber, assigned for valuable consideration to the trustees of the settlement all timber & timberlike trees then growing & being, & which should thereafter grow & be, upon the estate:—Held: (1) this included not only wood which was considered timber everywhere, as oak, ash & elm, but wood which was timber by the custom of the county; (2) it was proper that the wood should be properly thinned & that the thinning should be employed & used on the estate for fencing & other matters; (3) such thinnings, & the rights of determining what were proper thinning, belonged to the trustees; (4) an injunction against cutting timber & timberlike trees should be granted against the tenant for life.—GORDON v. WOODFORD (1859), 27 Beav. 603; 29 L. J. Ch. 222; 1 L. T. 260; 6 Jur. N. S. 59; 54 E. R. 239.

725. Settlement—Right of infant tenant in tail—Perpetuity.]—Timber on an estate in strict settlement, if regarded as part of the inheritance, is yet not preserved from alienation during infancy of the tenant in tail; & the settlor cannot superadd to the tenancy in tail a provision which would render the timber inalienable during such infancy. If the power of trustees to cut timber for the purposes of the settlement be permissive only, not imperative, it is at least concurrent with the right of the infant tenant in tail to the timber, & to the extent in which it derogates from that right, it is liable to the objection of creating a perpetuity. Exors, cutting timber upon a supposed trust, afterwards held to be void, might be personally chargeable in equity as trustees for the owner of the timber, if they acted fraudulently or retained the proceeds of the timber, or gained any benefit by it; but not if they acted by mere mistake, & held no part of the proceeds in their hands. In the latter case the exors. might be regarded in equity as strangers who, under a mistaken supposition of right, had done a legal wrong, for which there was a legal remedy.—FERRAND v. WILSON (1845), 4 Hare, 344; 15 L. J. Ch. 41; 9 Jur. 860; 67 E. R. 680.

726. — Incumbrances—Relief of inheritance.]—By a settlement, dated 1832, certain real estates were vested in trustees in fee, upon trust to keep down interest upon incumbrances affecting the estates out of the rents, & by mtges. & sales to raise moneys towards the discharge of the principal, & subject thereto, upon trust for O. for life, with remainder in trust for his son H. for life without impeachment of waste, but subject to the power thereafter given to the trustees to fell timber, with remainder in trust for the first & other sons of the son of H. in tail male, with remainder in trust for the heirs & assigns of O. in fee. Power was then given to the trustees at any time or times thereafter, so long as there should be any incumbrances upon the estates (but, after the death of O., not without the consent of the son, H., if living, in writing), to fell timber upon the estates, & to apply the proceeds in discharge of the incumbrances. After the death of O. the son claimed the right to fell timber & apply the proceeds for his own use, & gave notice to the trustees that it was his intention not to consent to any sale of timber by them under their power. Upon bill filed by the trustees for an injunction to restrain the son from preventing the sale of timber by them so long as there were incumbrances upon the estate:—Held: (1) the timber growing upon the estate during the life of deft., the son, was to be applicable, not to his own purposes, but to relieve the inheritance from the incumbrances; (2) the power to fell timber given to the trustees was not void as an infringement of the law against perpetuities.—BRIGGS v. OXFORD (EARL)

727. Devise by will—Codicil—Trust to let & invest—Revocation.]—A will devising estates for life without impeachment of waste is not revoked by a codicil directing the trustees to let until the tenant for life marries, by leases under which the lessees shall be impeachable for waste, & the rents are to be accumulated & invested in land; & the tenant for life remains entitled to the timber.—*LUSHINGTON v. 728. Management generally.]—Timber growing amongst underwood must be cut down not to prejudice the underwood, especially where underwood bears a great price, etc., &:—Held: such cutting was too much for a trustee to do, & an injunction must be granted to stay waste (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).—KNIGHT v. DUPLESSIS (1751), 2 Ves. Sen. 360; 28 E. R. 230.

Annotations:—Consd. Burgess v. Lamb (1809), 16 Ves. 174. Lord Hardwicke's opinion is material, that it is not waste to cut timber, where necessary for the growth of the underwood, in which it is situated (LORD ELDON, C.). Refd. Dashwood v. Magniac, [1891] 3 Ch. 306, C. A.

729. Ornamental timber.]—The case of a trust or restriction created for preservation of ornamental timber is not like a trust for purposes of benevolence (as to which the objects are unlimited, & no standard can be found), but semble is a trust or restriction which the ct. will endeavour to execute or enforce.

Semble: (1) there are cases in which the ct. may execute a trust for the application of money to purposes of taste or ornament, & in so doing, may, in the absence of any prescribed standard, or if the standard be more or less indefinite, act upon opinions of persons who are consulted by others in such matters, as it acts in other cases upon opinions of persons of science; (2) the ct. may more readily act in enforcing a restriction on exercise of the legal power in a matter of taste or ornament, where the restriction is connected with a trust, than in the common law case of equitable waste in the absence of any such trust.—MARKER v. MARKER (1851), 9 Hare, 1; 20 L. J. Ch. 246; 17 L. T. O. S. 176; 15 Jur. 663; 68 E. R. 389.

730. —.]—Trustees in whom an estate is vested ought not to cut down ornamental trees alleged to be prejudicial, without first applying to the parties beneficially interested for their assent, or to the ct. for its authority; & the onus of showing that the trees are prejudicial lies on the trustees. A perpetual injunction was granted against trustees, who cut down three ornamental trees, & failed in proving, to the satisfaction of the ct., that they were prejudicial to the residence. A bill filed against trustees & the tenant to prevent equitable waste was dismissed with costs as against the tenant, it not being shown that he had committed or intended to commit any waste, though some had been committed by the trustees at his request.—CAMPBELL v. ALLGOOD (1853), 17 Beav. 623; 51 E. R. 1177.

731. Trustee taking advantage of his position.]—A. seised in fee of land demised the premises to trustees, B., C., & D., for five hundred years in trust to pay debts & for a charity. B., one of the trustees, being in possession, & as a receiver appointed by the ct., cut down £1,000 worth of timber, D., one of the other trustees, consenting:—Held: B., the trustee for the charity or as receiver, ought not to

737. Sale of timber—Specific performance.—Semble: although purchasers of timber may be entitled, in some cases, to insist upon delivery of the specific timber contracted for & to enforce it by suit for specific performance, a special case is required for the purpose, & the ordinary remedy of such purchasers is in damages (TURNER, V.-C.).—MARKER v. 738. 739. Contract for purchase of timber to be cut & removed—Repudiation—Injunction—Specific performance.—Pltfs. entered into a contract with deft. for purchase of certain timber growing on his property. By the contract they were to have the right to enter upon the property, cut the timber, & saw it up thereon, to erect sawmills, & to remove the timber, & deft. was to give free exit for all timber to hard roads & free sites for sawmills. Pltfs. erected a sawmill & commenced to cut timber, saw it up, & remove it. Deft. repudiated the contract & forcibly ousted pltfs. & their men from the estate. Pltfs. brought an action against deft., asking for an injunction restraining him from preventing due execution of the contract, & for damages. Deft. contended, inter alia, that the claim for an injunction was equivalent to a claim for specific performance, & that the ct. would not grant specific performance of such a contract, but would leave pltfs. to their remedy by way of damages :—Held : (1) although the ct. might be unable to compel pltfs. to cut the timber if they refused to do so, it had jurisdiction to give them relief by way of specific performance ; (2) the injunction ought to be granted.—JONES (JAMES) & SONS, LTD. v. TANKERVILLE (EARL), [1909] 2 Ch. 440 ; 78 L. J. Ch. 674 ; 101 L. T. 202 ; 25 T. L. R. 714.

740. Timber estate—Misrepresentation as to size—Specific performance.—Bill by a vendor for specific performance of a contract to purchase a timber estate, where the particulars of sale described it as comprising a certain wood “with upwards of 65 acres of fine oak timber trees, the average size of which approached 50 ft.” & in the particulars of the lot described it only as “65 acres, 2 roods, & 12 perches of growing timber.” It appeared on the evidence for pltf. that the average size of the trees was about 35 ft., but on that for deft. that it was only about 22 ft. ; & deft. alleged that it was sold at a time when he had no means of seeing the wood, & that he relied on the particulars of sale :—Held : (1) as the representation in the particulars of sale had proved to be incorrect, & as it was not shown that deft. knew it to be incorrect at the time of making the contract, the ct. would not, at all events, enforce specific performance of the contract without compensation; (2) as the particulars of sale did not express what number of trees or quantity of timber the wood contained, it was not a case in which the ct. could measure the extent of the deficiency, or ascertain the amount of compensation; (3) the bill must be dismissed.—BROOKE (LORD) v. 742. Difference between grant & exception.]—Deft. was lessee under a lease of land “excepting woods & underwoods & herons & shovellers building their nests therein.” He took birds in their nests on the trees:—Held: the lessor could maintain trespass for breaking his close & taking the birds.

There are differences between grants & exceptions of trees. A gift of a wood, or of a wood known by a particular name, passes the soil. By a gift of land, except the wood & underwood, all trees great & small are excepted, but not apple trees, since they are not ordinarily known as “wood.” A sale of all trees in the manor of D. does not include apple trees (BRUDNEL, J.).—LONDON (BP.) v. 759. Limitation of time for cutting.—A., seised of certain lands, bargained & sold by indenture all trees there growing to be cut & carried away within twenty years after the date of the indenture. The twenty years expired, & the bargainee cut down the trees. In trespass for cutting down the trees:—Held: (1) the property in the trees vested in the bargainee, & the limitation of time was to hasten the cutting down, within which, if the vendee did not cut them, he should be punished as a trespasser as to the land, & not as to the trees (WRAY, J.); (2) the conditional property vested in the vendee, & because the condition was broken the property of the trees was vested in A. (GAWDY, J.).—ANON. (1584), 1 Leon. 275; 74 E. R. 250.

760. This is a good condition, & extends to both the grants, though the soil is not granted, & the præmissa properly relates only to the thing (viz., the walks) conveyed. He who has the custody of the walk has quasi the custody of the soil itself, & of the things growing thereupon, viz., the herbage, & pannage for the deer; which is the reason, that if the keeper of a park cut down the trees, it is a forfeiture of his office, for it is an hurt to the game, & therefore, this condition is necessary & reasonable.—PEMBROKE (EARL) v. woods in & upon the premises to the lessee, & that he might carry them off the lands during the time of thirty years. The lessee cut down all the woods, & afterwards other wood grew, which he also cut within the term. The lessor brought waste:—Held: only trees growing at time of sale were included.—ANON. (1573), 3 Leon. 29; 74 E. R. 520.

The lease was granted on the surrender of a former lease, & on payment of a fine amounting to one year & a quarter's rent, calculated on the value of the coppice & underwood & not of the timber:—Held: the lease did not comprise timber trees, but merely coppice & underwoods, & the lessors having during the term cut down on the demised premises a large quantity of timber, a bill filed against them by the lessee for an account was dismissed with costs.—

Pltf. was an assignee of the reversion on the lease, & deft. was an assignee of the vendee on the sale of the trees:—Held: (1) deft. had a good title to all the trees felled by him; (2) the “namely” did not restrict the effect of the general clause granting all the woods on the manor; (3) the covenant to take the trees within five years did not control the grant, & the vendee might take them whenever he would; (4) by the grant of trees to a tenant in fee simple they absolutely passed away from the grantor & his heir & vested in the grantee, being in law chattels divided from the freehold, & the grantee had power incident to the grant to fell them when he would.—*STUKELEY v. ## SUB-SECT. 3.—EFFECT OF EXCEPTIONS, RESERVATIONS AND PROVISOS, ETC.

773. Exceptions & reservations of trees in lease—Effect—Lease under power—Validity.]—A tenant in fee simple devised lands in London, & a manor & lands in P. in Somersetshire, to a tenant for life, with power to let the lands in London for twenty-one years in possession, & also to make leases of the lands in the manor of P. for ninety-nine years, determinable on one, two, or three lives, in possession or reversion, of such parts as were or had been anciently demised for one, two, or three lives, so as the ancient & accustomed yearly rents & reservations should be thereby reserved, & also to let all other lands in P. for twenty-one years, all the leases being made & granted in same manner & form, with & under such & the like reservations, restrictions, covenants, conditions, & agreements, as were usually & customarily contained in leases of same kind in the several & respective parishes & places where same premises were situate. Leases for ninety-nine years, determinable on lives as aforesaid, having been made by the tenant for life:—Held: (1) to show whether the first proviso in such power be complied with, the previous leases of same premises, but not other similar leases in P., were evidence, & semble: the latest preceding lease of same premises was the most proper evidence; (2) exceptions & reservations (so called) from the demise of timber trees, mines, & quarries, were exceptions, not reservations, nor would they necessarily be construed as coming within the word “reservations” in a power, though the power mentioned rent & reservations, & there appeared to be in fact no reservation besides, except rent; at any rate, the construction would not be such where there were in fact reservations besides rent; (3) the ancient lease excepting from the demise all timber, trees & trees likely to prove timber then standing, growing, or being, or which during the term granted should stand, etc., on the premises, & the lease under the power excepting all timber trees, bodies of pollard & other trees whatsoever standing etc., the latter lease was not good, the difference in the exception varying the subject-matter of the demise & the rent not being the ancient rent.—*DOE d. 776. Exception of great trees—Future trees.]—Lease of a manor for years, excepting & reserving the great trees upon the premises, with right of re-entry if the lessee committed voluntary waste. The lessee cut down trees, which at the time of the demise were little trees, but had in course of time become great trees:—Held: (1) the exception did extend to trees which became great; (2) such trees were never demised; (3) the condition did not extend to them.—GAMOCK & CLIFF'S CASE (1587), 1 Leon. 60; 74 E. R. 56.

777. Exception of trees—Future trees.]—A clause in an indenture of lease reserving, out of the demise, to the lessor “all wood & underwood, timber & timber trees, standing, growing, or being thereon, or at any time thereafter to stand or grow thereon, with full & free liberty of ingress & egress, to take & carry away same,” applies only to trees standing when the lease was granted, not to those afterwards planted by the tenant. Its operation is so restricted by 23 & 24 Geo. 3, c. 39.—GALWEY (GALWAY) v. BAKER (1840), 7 Cl. & Fin. 379; West, 467; 7 E. R. 1114, H. L.

WAY* (1812), 4 Taunt. 316; 128 E. R. 351.

781. Exception of timber & trees—Apple trees.]—By deed a lessor demised certain lands in Dorsetshire except & reserved to the lessor all timber trees & other trees, but not the annual fruit thereof. In that county cider was made & apples constituted a great part of the annual produce:—Held: apple trees were not within the exception, since the words of the lease were to be construed in favour of the lessee, & “fruit” might be used to denote the produce not only of orchard but of timber trees.

The words “other trees” do not extend to fruit trees (HOLROYD, J.).

The word “trees” generally means wood applicable to buildings & does not include orchard trees (LITLEDAL, J.).—BULLEN v. DENNING (1826), 5 B. & C. 842; 8 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 657; 4 L. J. O. S. K. B. 314; 108 E. R. 313.

The grantor may not cut till choice is made, or a request made within the time they are to be cut.—MOTTERAM (MOTTRAM) v. JOLLY (1675), 3 Keb. 477, 493; 2 Lev. 142; 1 Vent. 271; 84 E. R. 833, 840.

792. Covenant that covenantee may cut trees—Derogation from grant.]—A dowress of land covenanted with the reversioner that he might lawfully cut each year twenty trees. Afterwards she cut down the whole wood:—Held: the reversioner might sue for breach of the covenant.—ANON. (1559), Moore, K. B. 18, pl. 65; 72 E. R. 411.

793. Covenant to pay for all coppice standing at end of term.]—A covenant in an indenture of lease for twenty-one years from Michaelmas provided that the tenant should not, during the term, cut down any of the coppice of less than ten years' growth, or at any unseasonable time of the year, but that at the end of the term the landlord agreed to pay the tenant the value of all such growth of coppice as should be then standing & growing:—Held: (LE BLANC, J., diss.) according to its grammatical construction (uncontrolled by any other part of the instrument showing a different intent) the covenant bound the landlord, to whom the words of the covenant were to be attributed, to pay the tenant for the value of

PART IX. SECT. 4, SUB-SECT. 3.

785 i. Reservation—Of full enjoyment of land to vendor of timber.]—Pltf. was the owner of a farm, two-thirds of which was heavily wooded, & the rest cleared & cultivated. Defts. became the purchasers of the trees & timber upon the land under an agreement, which provided that the purchaser should have "full liberty to enter into & upon the lands for the purpose of removing the trees & timber, at such times & in such manner as he may think proper," but reserved to pltf. the full enjoyment of the land "save & in so far as may be necessary for the cutting & removing of the trees & timber":—Held: defts. had a right to remove the timber by the most direct & available route, & the reservation in favour of pltf. did not minimise or modify defts. right, under the general grant of the trees, to remove the trees across the cleared land.—STEPHENS v. GORDON (1893), 22 S. C. R. 61.—CAN.

PART IX. SECT. 4, SUB-SECT. 4.

h. Covenant that covenantee may use lying down timber.]—Under a covenant in a lease made in pursuance of Short Forms Act, the lessee was not to cut down timber for any purpose whatever, except for fire wood, but he was to have the privilege of using for any purpose all lying down hard wood timber, cedar only excepted:—Held: the covenant was a restriction of the statutory covenant, but was an extension of the common law right, which was limited to lying down dead timber, & the covenant allowed the lessee to use all the lying down hard wood timber, sound or unsound, except in so far as restricted by the exception as to cedar.—SMELLIE v. WATSON (1904), 7 O. L. R. 635; 2 O. W. R. 118; 3 O. W. R. 475.—CAN.

j. Covenant to take proper care of fruit trees.]—A covenant in a lease that the lessee will "take proper care of the fruit trees," prima facie only applies to the trees planted & growing on the premises at the time the lease is executed. Semble: (1) it would not apply to trees planted by the lessor under an oral agreement subsequent to the execution; (2) if, before the lease was executed, it had been expressly agreed that the trees to be afterwards planted by the lessor should be included in the covenant, & upon that understanding they were planted, the covenant might apply to them, but such agreement must be established by the lessor by undoubted testimony.—CROZIER v. TABB (1876), 26 C. P. 369.—CAN.

k. Covenant not to cut except for fences or buildings.]—A lessee covenanted that during the term he would not cut any standing timber upon the lands except for rails or buildings on the demised premises, & also would sufficiently repair & keep repaired the erections & buildings, fences & gates, erected or to be erected upon the premises, the lessor finding or allowing on the premises all rough timber for same, or allowing lessee to cut & fell so many timber trees upon the premises as should be requisite:—Held: there was nothing to indicate that the landlord was to control the use of the timber so that he might limit it to the buildings, fences, & erections existing at the date of the lease.—COOK v. EDWARDS (1886), 10 O. R. 341.—CAN.

all the coppice of less than ten years' growth left standing on the demised premises at the end of the term, though no special consideration appeared on the face of the deed for the landlord's agreeing to make a compensation to the tenant for the value of such part of the coppice which the tenant was not entitled to cut.—LOVE v. PARES (1810), 13 East, 80; 104 E. R. 297.

794. Covenant not to lop trees—Penalty or liquidated damages.]—A declaration stated that defts. covenanted "they would not lop or top any tree, without the consent in writing of pltf., under a penalty of £20 for each tree which should be so lopped or topped, over & above the actual value of the tree." Breach, that defts. "lopped twenty trees, without the consent in writing of pltf., which trees were of the value of £80, & defts. then became liable to pay, & ought to have paid to pltf., the sum of £80, being the value of the trees, & also the further sum of £20 for each of the trees so lopped by defts., being the amount of penalties then incurred & forfeited by defts., to pltf. for lopping the trees":—Held: assuming the £20 penalty to be liquidated damage pltf. could not recover it on this breach, as it did not allege that the penalty was not paid.—HURST v. HURST (1849), 4 Exch. 571; 19 L. J. Ex. 410; 14 L. T. O. S. 257; 154 E. R. 1341.

796. Construction of lease of orchard—Trees properly removed.]—A lessee covenanted to deliver up at the end of the term all trees, which were at date of the lease standing in the orchard whole & undamaged, reasonable use & wear only excepted, & there was a proviso for re-entry on breach of covenant. Deft. cut down trees in the orchard which were decayed & past bearing, the orchard being too crowded with trees. In an ejectment for breach of the covenant:—Held: the removal of the trees past bearing from the too crowded orchard must be considered the reasonable use of the orchard & the trees, & deft.'s act was within the exception.—DOE d. JONES v. CROUCH (1810), 2 Camp. 449.

797. Covenant to leave trees—Trees wrongfully cut—Right of action.]—A lessee covenanted to leave the houses, trees & woods at the end of the term in as good plight as he found them; & afterwards the lessee cut down a tree:—Held: the covenant was broken, & the lessor should not stay until the end of the term to bring his action of covenant, because it was apparent the tree could not grow again & be in as good plight as it was when the lease was taken (DODDERIDGE, J.).—WATERER & MOUNTAGUE'S CASE (1623), Godb. 335; 78 E. R. 197.

798. Repairs—Covenant to deliver timber for.]—Covenant to deliver timber (growing on the premises) sufficient for the repairs thereof. Averment, that there was timber growing on the premises sufficient for the repairs, but deft. had not delivered it. Plea, that there was not timber growing on the premises sufficient & proper for the repairs:—Semble: (1) the covenant meant the timber should be sufficient in quality as well as quantity; (2) the plea was good (not having been demurred to), without stating that there was not timber sufficient for any part of the repairs.—SNELL v. SNELL (1825),

799. Covenant to plant trees & keep them in order.]—In an action on an agreement by pltf. to plant a quantity of trees, & "well & sufficiently to keep them in order" for two years, & to replant such as should die during that period, except from injury by sheep, game, or cattle, the judge rejected evidence tendered by deft., that the trees had been destroyed by being choked up with weeds & grass & were of no value, & the jury found a verdict for pltf., & that "well & sufficiently to keep in order" meant pruning only:—Held: (1) the evidence was improperly rejected, & the agreement was not rightly construed; (2) as the verdict was not perverse, deft. could have a new trial only on payment of costs.—ALLEN v. CAMERON (1833), 1 Cr. & M. 832; 3 Tyr. 907; 2 L. J. Ex. 263; 149 E. R. 635.

800. Remove or grub up—Covenant not to.]—A covenant not to remove or grub up trees is broken by removing trees from one part of the premises to another; & so it is by taking away trees, even if the lessee plant a greater quantity than he takes away, unless those taken away are dead.—DOE d. WETHERELL v. BIRD (1833), 6 C. & P. 195.

801. Lease of quarries—Covenant not to commit waste in trees—Cutting necessary to work quarry.]—A lease contained a demise of land & quarries with power to open & work them at certain rent & royalties, with an exception of trees on the premises. The lessee covenanted not to commit waste by cutting the trees. There was a proviso for re-entry on the lessee committing waste by any of the means aforesaid. The lessee cut down trees which it was necessary to remove in order to work the quarries:—Held: (1) the covenant was not to be construed (a) as prohibiting waste generally, (b) as an unqualified covenant not to cut down the trees excepted, (c) nor as not to cut down trees excepted so as to amount to waste in the technical sense; (2) the covenant meant the lessee should not so cut the trees excepted as that the cutting should amount to an excess of the rights which it was intended the lessee should exercise; (3) the lessee's act was not a breach of covenant working a forfeiture.—DOE d. ROGERS v. PRICE (1849), 8 C. B. 891; 19 L. J. C. P. 121; 14 L. T. O. S. 329; 137 E. R. 760.

805. Sale of woods, etc., then growing—Construction.]—D., being seised of the manor of C., by indenture bargained & sold to A. all those her woods, underwoods & hedgerows, as had been accustomed to be felled & sold, standing, growing, being in, upon & within C., to have & to hold during the natural life of D., A. paying £10 yearly during the term. A. cut down all the woods, etc., growing at the time of the indenture. Afterwards D., by her servants, felled all the other woods growing in the same manor:—Held: in trespass, after the bargainee had once felled he should never after fell in the same place, notwithstanding the rent yearly reserved, & the words "to have & to hold during the life of D."—ANDREWS & GLOVER'S CASE (1562), 3 Leon. 7; 1 And. 7; 74 E. R. 505.

806. Contract to value "timber"—Meaning.]—Deft. having told pltf., a land surveyor, that he was tenant for life of an estate, & wanted to sell every stick of timber on it, engaged him to value it roughly, at a certain rate per cent., & gave him a written order to that effect, signed only by himself. The witnesses on both sides agreed that timber ordinarily meant trees of a certain growth, & the valuation included mere saplings, so that it did not show the value of the timber:—Held: there was nothing to show that the word timber was not used in its ordinary sense, & the valuation not being what was ordered & being proved to be grossly incorrect, the jury might find it worthless.—WHITTY v. DILLON (LORD) (1860), 2 F. & F. 67.

807. Contract of sale—"Timber"—Meaning.]—Resp. agreed to sell to applts. at an agreed price shares in a saw mills co., which had extensive rights of cutting timber over a large area of ground for long periods of time. The agreement contained a provision to the effect that the vendor was to give a satisfactory guarantee to the purchasers "that the quantity of timber on the different tracts of land as shown by the state . . . attached hereto . . . is true & accurate," & in the event of the quantity of timber on the various tracts failing, on verification, to reach the quantity represented in the attached statement the vendor was to repay to the purchasers the amount of shortage:—Held: the word "timber" must be held to mean all timber trees growing on the land which were reasonably fit for use in such a business as that carried on by the co., & should not be restricted to such trees as were at the date of the agreement capable of being felled & sold at a profit at the then current prices.—SWIFT v. DAVID (1912), 107 L. T. 71, P. C.

808. Agreement made in ignorance of death of tenant for life.]—A tenant in tail, expectant on the death of a tenant for life who was insolvent, being desirous of preserving the timber on the estate from being cut, signed an agreement with the agent of the assignee of the tenant for life, agreeing that the assignee should have the same right to the timber as if he had actually cut it, on a past day named, which was prior to the death of the tenant for life, & the assignee agreed to refrain from cutting it for a month. It turned out that the tenant for life was dead at the date of the agreement, although both the tenant in tail & the agent of the assignee were ignorant of the fact:—Held: (1) the agreement was founded on a mistake; (2) it was without consideration, & the ct. should refuse to enforce it.—COCHRANE v. WILLIS (1865), 1 Ch. App. 58; 35 L. J. Ch. 36; 13 L. T. 339; 11 Jur. N. S. 870; 14 W. R. 19, L.JJ.

809. Sale of copyholds & freeholds with timber—Specific performance.]—Lands of copyhold & freehold tenure lying intermixed & undistinguishable were sold with the timber standing on them. The conditions of sale stipulated that the vendor was not to be bound to distinguish the freeholds from the copyholds, & that the timber was to be taken at a valuation made for purposes of that sale, the value of the timber on each lot being specified. The deposit was paid of £10 per cent. on the whole price of the land & timber. It was also stipulated that in case of delay in the completion of the purchase, interest at £5 per cent. should be payable on the whole price of the land & timber:—Held: (1) the contract was an entire contract for sale of land with timber on it, not two contracts, one for sale & another for timber; (2) the purchaser was not entitled to any abatement, though he could not cut a single tree, not being able to distinguish any one tree as standing on freehold ground; (3) in the case of one lot sold under the same conditions & particulars of sale, & which consisted entirely of copyholds, the purchaser was equally bound to pay the stipulated price for the timber, although he could not cut any of it.—CROSSE v. LAWRENCE (1852), 9 Hare, 462; 21 L. J. Ch. 889; 18 L. T. O. S. 314; 16 Jur. 142; 68 E. R. 591.

Considerable sums were paid by pltf. to deft. under these contracts, & pltf. erected sawmills, bothies for their workmen, & other erections on the estates, & they removed a considerable part of the timber. Deft. then purported to repudiate the contracts, & forcibly, by his servants & agents, prevented pltf. from entering on the estates to cut the timber, pulled down the sawmills & bothies erected by pltf., & carried away parts of the machinery. 819. Timber fit to be cut & decaying—Inquiry.]—Timber on settled estates was fit to be cut & in danger of running to decay. The tenants for life had not power to commit waste, except to cut coppice wood. On application by an infant tenant in tail in remainder the Lord Chancellor ordered an inquiry whether it would be for the benefit of pl'tf. & other persons interested to have the timber cut:—Held: (1) the order was wrong in doing for the tenant in tail what he could not have done for himself; (2) the proceeds of sale must be invested until he came of age, when the claims must be discussed.—*MILDMAY v. 827. Leave to cut timber—When granted.]—The ct. would not be justified in ordering timber to be cut on the application of a tenant for life impeachable for waste, merely because it was ripe for cutting, unless it were also decaying, or injuring the growth of other timber. If a tenant for life impeachable for waste cuts timber without leave of the ct., he will never be permitted to derive any advantage from his wrongful act. In such a case, the act being wrongful, Stat. Limitations begins to run against the remainderman from the time of the cutting.—SEAGRAM v. KNIGHT (1867), 2 Ch. App. 628; 36 L. J. Ch. 918; 17 L. There was timber on the premises greatly decaying. B. brought a bill, praying that the decaying timber might be cut down, sold, & the money divided betwixt him & the infant, & the tenant for life insisted to have part of the money :—Held: (1) the tenant for life must have sufficient left for repairs, etc., & an allowance for all damage done to him on the ground, but no allowance for the timber, which, when severed by accident, or by a trespasser, belonged to the first owner of the inheritance; (2) decaying timber, if for ornament or safety, was not to be cut down; (3) where an infant was interested in the inheritance, no timber could be cut down, but by the approbation of the master, & the infant's moiety of the money to be put out for his benefit.—*BEWICK v. 833. Whether realty or personalty — Lunatic's estate.]—Timber on the estate of a lunatic was cut under order of ct., sold, & the produce paid into the bank on his account. After his death, on petition by his heir for the money:—Held: (1) when property was converted, equity would recall it for the representative, if done by breach of trust, not if by accident, the ct., or the tort of a stranger; (2) on account of its consequence & the difficulty of reversing an order made on petition, the ct. would refuse to give it to either representative without a bill.—*Ex p. There was, on the estate, timber which required felling. The ct., on a bill filed for that purpose by the tenant for life, authorised same to be cut down, & directed a reference to the master for that purpose. The money arising from the timber in such cases is settled on trusts similar to those on which the estate stands limited.—PETERS v. BLAKE (1837), 6 L. J. Ch. 157.

838. Right of tenant for life sans waste in remainder.]—An estate was devised to A. for life impeachable for waste, remainder to B. for life without impeachment of waste, with remainder to C. in fee. C., the reversioner in fee, resisted the claim, & contended that they formed part of the corpus of the estate:—Held: B. entitled to receive the proceeds.—*PHILLIPS v. Timber had been cut on the estates by the direction of the ct.:—Held: (1) the term "rents & profits" meant annual rents & profits, & the trustees were not entitled to apply the proceeds of this timber which was a portion of the inheritance to discharge mtges.; (2) the tenant for life in possession, though not in possession of the rents & profits of the estate, was entitled to all other rights incident to his estate, unless they would interfere with the execution by the trustees of their trusts; (3) he was entitled to the proceeds of the timber which had been cut.—*LOVAT (LORD) v. ponement, & directed that until sale the annual produce of the estate should be treated as income & applied accordingly, & he directed that the net proceeds of the sale & conversion should (in the events which happened) be held on trust in equal amounts for his two sons for life, with remainder to their respective issue. Larches planted on the estate were cut & sold when the trees were some thirty years old, & by reason of the urgent demand arising out of the European War for trees of this size, realised at least as large a price as they would nominally have realised at maturity—that is, when fifty or sixty years old. ASTBURY, J., held they had not been cut in a due & proper course, & the purchase-money was not payable to the tenants for life as annual produce of the estate, but, being a profit arising to the estate owing to an exceptional or accidental occurrence, must, after payment thereout of the costs of sale & of replanting the plantations, be divided into moieties, of which one moiety should be capitalised & the other paid to the tenants for life as income:—Held: under the above order (which should be affirmed) the tenants for life were receiving at least as much as they could possibly be entitled to.—*Re TERRY, TERRY v. C. having cut timber, this was sold under an order of the ct., & the produce paid into the bank. At C.'s death D. had no son, & E. was dead, leaving F. his eldest son:—Held: the produce of the timber belonged to F. absolutely, & did not abide the event of D.'s having a son.—*DARE v. ## SECT. 8.—WASTE AS REGARDS TREES.

Waste in general as between landlord & tenant, see LANDLORD & TENANT.

As between the owner of a particular estate or remainderman, see SETTLEMENTS.

SUB-SECT. 1.—GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

850. Rule generally.]—Waste properly is in timber trees, either by cutting of them down or topping of them or doing any act whereby the timber may decay. Cutting down of willows, beech, birch, ash, maple, or the like standing in the defence & safeguard of the house is destruction (PARKE, B.)—PHILLIPPS (PHILLIPS) v. SMITH (1845), 14 M. & W. 589; 15 L. J. Ex. 201; 10 J. P. 533; 153 E. R. 610.

Annotation:—Consd. Dashwood v. Magniac, [1891] 3 Ch. 306, C. A.

851. .]—The question whether cutting timber is waste depends upon the questions (1) whether the consumption of the timber is necessary for its reasonable enjoyment, & (2) whether in any reasonable view of the circumstances the grantor must have intended the timber to be reasonably enjoyed. Reasonable necessity of construction, not the prudent management of estates, lies at the bottom of the doctrine (BOWEN, L.J.).—DASHWOOD v. MAGNIAC, [1891] 3 Ch. 306; 60 L. J. Ch. 809; 65 L. T. 811; 7 T. L. R. 629, C. A.

852. What is waste.]—An action for waste will not lie for cutting young ash trees, say of the age of seven or eight years. Waste is only for things which are prejudicial to the inheritance, as in houses, great ash trees, & the like, & not in small things (BRIAN, C.J.).—ANON. (1497), Y. B., 13 Hen. 7, fo. 20, pl. 3.

853. What is not waste.]—Those acts are not waste which are not prejudicial to the inheritance, as the cutting of willows, maples, beeches, & thorns which were not timber by law or by local custom.—BARRET v. BARRET (1628), 11et. 34; 124 E. R. 321.

East London Waterworks Co.*, [1900] 1 Ch. 624.

854. Questions for jury.]—In a writ of waste founded on Stat. Gloucester (c. 5), it appeared that deft., a tenant for life, had cut down trees on the estate at three different times, the last of which was more than four years before the writ was sued out, & plffs.' witnesses admitted that several of such trees had been felled for the benefit of the estate. At the trial it was left to the jury to say whether they thought the felling of the trees had been injurious to the inheritance, & if so, that they should find a verdict for plffs., but if they should be of opinion that they were cut down bona fide, & with a view to improve the estate, then for deft.; & the jury found a verdict for the latter. The ct. granted a new trial, on the ground that the whole of the case had not been gone into at the original trial.—REDFERN v. SMITH (1823), 1 Bing. 382; 8 Moore, C. P. 443; 2 L. J. O. S. C. P. 30; 130 E. R. 154.

855. De minimis non curat lex.]—Semble: the destruction of one or two hazels, willows, or apple trees growing in a wood of ash trees, is not waste; but the destruction of a garden of apple trees is waste.—ANON. (1494), Y. B., 10 Hen. 7, fo. 2, pl. 3.

See, further, ACTION, Vol. I., pp. 36—40.

856. Evidence admissible in construction of settlement or will.]—Evidence is admissible, not only of the custom which makes trees of a particular kind timber, but to prove a usage as to management, with reference to which parties may have contracted or made testamentary or other dispositions of their property (LINDLEY, L.J.).—DASHWOOD

v. MAGNIAC, [1891] 3 Ch. 306; 60 L. J. Ch. 809; 65 L. T. 811; 7 T. L. R. 629, C. A.

857. Dead wood.]—Cutting of dead wood is not waste at law.—ANON. (1427), Fitz. N. B. 59 (M.); 22 Vin. Abr. tit. Waste, M., pl. 20.

858. Decayed timber.]—Cutting down decayed timber is as much waste as cutting down any other.—PERROT v. PERROT (1744), 3 Atk. 94; 26 E. R. 857.

859. Decaying wood.]—Deft. was tenant for life under a settlement with remainder to his first & other sons in tail, with remainder to pltf. for life, & with the ultimate reversion in fee to deft. On application by pltf. for an injunction to stay cutting timber, deft. contended that he had only cut down decayed trees which it was in the public interest to cut down :—Held: (1) the question did not concern the interest of the public, unless it had been in the King's forests & chases, but was merely a private interest between the parties; (2) there was no distinction between young timber trees that had not come to their full growth & decayed timber; (3) an injunction would be granted, since pltf. could not sue deft. at law.—PERROT v. PERROT (1744), 3 Atk. 94; 26 E. R. 857.

861. Firs.]—Cutting a fir tree down to the ground would be waste, because it would not grow again (ROLFE, B.).—PHILLIPPS (PHILLIPS) v. SMITH (1815), 14 M. & W. 589; 15 L. J. Ex. 201; 10 J. P. 533; 153 E. R. 410.

862. Fruit trees.]—Cutting pear trees or apple trees may be waste.—ANON. (1429), Y. B., 7 Hen. 6, fo. 38, pl. 47; 22 Vin. Abr. tit. Waste, E., 8 & 9.

863. —]—Cutting down filbert trees & apple trees in an orchard is waste. Semble: had they been growing in a wood of timber trees, & not been for the protection of the house, to cut them would not have been waste.—ANON. (1494), Y. B., 10 Hen. 7, fo. 5, pl. 7.

864. Germens.]—Cutting germens, that is to say, the roots of trees, so that the spring cannot grow, or allowing the close to be open & cattle to enter & destroy the spring, is waste.—ANON. (1466), Y. B., 5 Edw. 4, fo. 100b (Long Quinto).

865. —]—The destroying of germens is waste.—ANON. (1433), Y. B., 11 Hen. 6, fo. 1, pl. 3; 22 Vin. Abr. tit. Waste, E., pl. 26.

PART IX. SECT. 8, SUB-SECT. 1.

853 i. What is not waste.]—A tenant for life in Canada may cut down timber in the proper course of good husbandry, in order to bring the proper proportion of the land under cultivation, & perhaps destroy such timber, but he cannot cut down timber, even for the same purposes, & sell it.—SAUNDERS v. BREAKIE (1884), 5 O. R. 603.—CAN.

PART IX. SECT. 8, SUB-SECT. 2.

m. Timber on wild land.]—It is not waste in a tenant for life to cut down timber on wild land for the sole purpose of bringing it into cultivation, provided the inheritance be not damaged thereby, & it is done in conformity with the rules of good husbandry.—DRAKE v. WIGLE (1874), 24 C. P. 405.—CAN.

n. — Pleading.]—DRAKE v. WIGLE (1872), 22 C. P. 341.—CAN.

o. Tapping trees.]—It is a question for the jury whether the tapping of trees for sugar making has the effect of destroying the trees, or of shortening their life, or injuring them for timber purposes; & if so found, a covenant not to cut down timber except for the lessee's use, or for purposes of improvement on the premises, will be broken by such tapping.—CAMPBELL v. SHIELDS (1879), 44 U. C. R. 449.—CAN.

867. —.]—Allowing germens to be destroyed by cattle is waste.—EVERWIK (DUKE) v. EVERWIK (DUCHESS) (1431), Y. B., 9 Hen. 6, fo. 65, pl. 21.

868. Hedgerows.—A hedge may be on a different footing as regards waste, if important as marking boundaries (ROLFE, B.).—PHILLIPPS (PHILLIPS) v. SMITH (1845), 14 M. & W. 589; 15 L. J. Ex. 201; 10 J. P. 533; 153 E. R. 610.

Hedges as boundaries.—See, further, BOUNDARIES, FENCES & PARTY WALLS.

869. Lopping & topping timber.—Lopping & topping ashes & elms is waste.—SAMUEL v. JOHNSON (1549), 1 Dyer, 65a; 73 E. R. 138.

870. Oaks, hornbeams, etc.—Cutting oaks at the age of eight or ten years is waste, but cutting hornbeams, hazels, willows or salallows of the age of forty years is in general not waste, because at no time will they be timber.—ANON. (1581), Godb. 4; 78 E. R. 3.

871. Seasonable wood.—If oaks are seasonable & accustomed to be cut at the age of twenty years, it is not waste to cut them.—ANON. (1433), Y. B., 11 Hen. 6, fo. 1. pl. 3; 22 Vin. Abr. tit. Waste, E., pl. 6.

Annotation :—Mentd. Bowles' Case (1615), 11 Co. Rep. 79b.

872. — Oaks.—After the age of twenty years, oaks cannot be said to be seasonable wood, & it is waste to cut them.—ANON. (1433), Y. B., 11 Hen. 6, fo. 1, pl. 3; 22 Vin. Abr. tit. Waste, E., pl. 7.

873. Standils.—Cutting down oaks, remaining on the land as standils, of a growth of from sixteen to twenty years, & in respect of which tithes were paid, is not waste, & even if they be twenty to twenty-four years' standing it is not waste, if the custom of the parties is to sell them for "seasonable" wood & if tithes be paid for them, as then they are not timber.—BROOK v. COBB (1612), 2 Brownl. 150; 123 E. R. 867.

Annotation :—Refd. Dashwood v. Magniac, [1891] 3 Ch. 306, C. A.

874. Thinnings generally.—Not all cutting of timber is waste. In places where oak coppice is felled regularly the felling would constitute the flower of the land, to which the tenants for life would be entitled. Further, proper & regular thinning of a wood for the purpose of improving the rest of the trees within certain limits would not be waste.—BAGOT v. BAGOT, LEGGE v. LEGGE (1863), 32 Beav. 509; 2 New Rep. 297; 33 L. J. Ch. 116; 9 L. T. 217; 9 Jur. N. S. 1022; 12 W. R. 35; 55 E. R. 200.

875. Thorns.—Cutting whitethorns may be waste.—ANON. (1372), Y. B., 46 Edw. 3, fo. 17, pl. 13; 22 Vin. Abr. tit. Waste, E., pl. 1.

876. —.]—The lessee of a manor & warren cut down thorns:—Held: not waste to stub thorns growing upon the land, but only to cut down thorn trees that had stood sixty or one hundred years.—MOYLE v. MAYLE (1599), Owen, 66; 74 E. R. 905.

Annotation :—Mentd. Elias v. Griffith (1878), 8 Ch. D. 521, C. A.

877. —.]—Eradicating whitethorns is waste, but cutting them & selling the cuttings is not waste, unless they grew in a pasture for the defence of cattle & were of the greatness of timber.—LASHMER v. AVERY (1606), Cro. Jac. 126; 79 E. R. 110.

878. —.]—It is waste to cut beech & whitethorn, if timber by custom. The cutting up of quicksets is not waste, if it preserves the spring.—PALMER'S CASE (1611), Co. Litt. 53a, n. (10).

879. —.]—The eradicating of whitethorn is waste, but not of blackthorn, unless the blackthorn grow in a hedge & the whole hedge is destroyed. It is not waste to cut quickset hedges. If a man has underwoods of hazel, willows, thorns, & is accustomed to cut them & sell them every ten years, his lessee does not commit waste if he fell them, but if he dig them up by the roots or suffer the germens to be bitten with cattle after they are felled so they will not grow again, it is a destruction of the inheritance, & an action of waste will lie for it. But if he mow the stocks with a wood scythe it is a malicious waste; & continual mowing & biting is destruction.—GAGE & SMITH'S CASE (1613), Godb. 209; 78 E. R. 127.

880. —.]—To cut whitethorns used to defend a manor-house from the wind, or standing in a pasture field & used for the shade of the beasts depasturing & intended approximately to remain in that form, is waste.—PHILLIPPS (PHILLIPS) v. SMITH (1845), 14 M. & W. 589; 15 L. J. Ex. 201; 10 J. P. 533; 153 E. R. 610.

883. Underwoods or thorns.—Raising up by the roots underwoods or thorns is waste (NEEDHAM, J.).—ANON. (1466), Y. B., 5 Edw. 4, fo. 100b (Long Quinto).

884. Willows.—If willows are in view of a manor-house & keep off the wind, or are in a bank in order to keep up the bank, to cut them down is waste (BRUDNEL, J.).—N. v. J. (1520), Y. B., 12 Hen. 8, fo. 1, pl. 1.

885. —.]—It is waste to cut down willows which support the bank of a river.—STRIPPING'S CASE (1621), Win. 15; 124 E. R. 13.

886. —.]—A tenant for years is not guilty of waste in cutting down willow trees for sale, which spring up again from the stools, unless they serve to protect the house, or to support the bank of a stream.—*PHILLIPPS (PHILLIPS) v. SUB-SECT. 3.—EQUITABLE WASTE—ORNAMENTAL AND OTHER TIMBER.

887. General principle.—Semble: (1) the principle on which the ct. protects ornamental timber is that if testator or author of the interest has gratified his own taste by planting for ornament, his taste, like his will, binds the parties, notwithstanding that it is made to appear to the ct. that the reverse taste was correct; (2) the question which is in fact the most fit method of clothing an estate with timber for the purpose of ornament cannot be entrusted to the ct. (LORD ELDON, C.).—Downshire (Marquis) v. Sandys (Lady) (1801), 6 Ves. 107; 31 E. R.

Annotations :—Consd. Wombwell v. Belasyse (1825), 6 Ves. 116, n. Expld. Marker v. Marker (1851), 9 Hare, 1. Distd. Micklethwait v. Micklethwait (1857), 1 De G. & J. 504. Mentd. Halliwell v. Phillips (1858), 4 Jur. N. S. 607.

888. —.].—Equitable waste consists of cutting either timber planted for ornament or shelter, or saplings & young trees, before fit for timber. It is not equitable waste to cut trees which have not attained their full growth & maturity; & an injunction to restrain a tenant for life unimpeachable for waste from such cutting, cannot be sustained. The ct. will not maintain an injunction against equitable waste, unless it is proved that it either has been committed or is threatened. — Potts v. Potts (1825), 3 L. J. O. S. Ch. 176.

889. —.].—A tenant for life without impeachment of waste has a right at law to cut timber on the estate, & has a property in the trees, but having abused that power by cutting ornamental trees & trees not ripe for cutting, a ct. of equity says he shall not do these things with impunity, but interposes to restrain the legal right; & equity not only restrains him from doing further waste, but directs an account of the waste done & will not suffer the individual to pocket the produce of the wrong, but directs the money produced by such waste to be laid up for the benefit of those who succeed to the estate (PLUMER, V.-C.).—Lansdowne (Marquis) v. Lansdowne (Marchioness Dowager) (1815), 1 Madd. 116; 56 E. R. 44.

890. —.].—In preservation of ornamental timber the ct., by applying the doctrine of equitable waste, controls & restrains excessive use of the legal power incident to an estate unimpeachable for waste, but with reference only to the presumed will & intention of the party by whom the power was created. The protection of the ct. is confined to timber planted & left standing for shelter or ornament; & the question, whether the protection should be extended to particular timber, is one of fact.—Marker v. Marker (1851), 9 Hare, 1; 20 L. J. Ch. 246; 17 L. T. O. S. 176; 15 Jur. 603; 68 E. R. 389.

— Limits of doctrine.].—Equitable waste has not been extended beyond trees planted or growing for ornament, as in avenues or vistas, to timber merely ornamental, viz., an extensive wood.—Burges v. Lamb (1809), 16 Ves. 174; 33 E. R. 950.

Annotations :—Mentd. Cholmeley v. Paxton (1825), 3 Bing. 207; Londesborough v. Somerville (1854), 19 Beav. 295; Davenport v. Davenport (1863) 33 L. J. Ch. 33; Dashwood v. Magniac, [1891] 3 Ch. 306, C. A.

892. —.].—Where the owner of an estate, with a residence, purchases adjoining lands with ornamental woods, the ct. will not, from that fact alone, infer that he intended to be left standing for ornament all such trees as he did not in his lifetime cut down; there must be some act of dedication, e.g., planting an avenue, cutting a vista, erecting obelisks, etc. A tree or trees may be highly ornamental, & yet not be entitled to the protection of the ct. as being planted or left standing for ornament. Saplings are not within the doctrine, nor are hedgerow trees, or any trees, however ornamental, if planted also for profit.

A tenant for life sans waste will not be interfered with in the exercise of his legal powers unless he is proceeding to use those legal powers in a manner inequitable towards those in remainder; & he may fell & sell trees planted for ornament, if done in a proper course of husbandry.—Halliwell v. Phillips (1858), 4 Jur. N. S. 607; 6 W. R. 408.

896. What is ornamental timber—Form of inquiry.].—In a suit by an encumbrancer for the purpose of enforcing his security on a settled estate, the application was made that a receiver might be at liberty to cut down & sell a number of trees. In the ct. below an inquiry had been directed to be made by a referee, with regard to a particular wood, as to whether any trees could be cut by a prudent owner in the proper management of the particular wood as a belt to the park, & with regard to other trees, whether they would not be cut by a prudent owner in the ordinary course of management :—Held : (1) the question what a prudent owner would do in the proper or ordinary course of management was no measure of the obligation on the tenant for life without impeachment of waste, with reference to timber planted or left standing for ornament, for such tenant for life was bound by the taste or want of taste of any absolute owner, by whom the timber might have been there planted or left standing; (2) the trees might have been planted or left standing for ornament or shelter, although the wood extended beyond the park. Semble : there could be no settled form of inquiry applicable to ornamental timber.—Ford v. Tynte (1864), 2 De G. J. & Sm. 127; 3 New Rep. 676; 10 L. T. 209; 10 Jur. N. S. 429; 12 W. R. 613; 46 E. R. 323, L.JJ.

899. — Conduct — Decaying or injurious trees.]—Whether timber is left standing for ornament or shelter is to be proved by conduct. Timber so left standing is not to be cut, though decayed or injurious to adjoining trees, unless its removal is essential to the intended purposes of ornament or shelter.—*LUSHINGTON v. 900. — Object with which planted or left.]—In an action to restrain the cutting of timber on the ground of equitable waste, the question to be decided is whether the timber was in fact planted or left for ornament or shelter, not whether it is ornamental or useful for shelter; but the ct. will accept the evidence of competent persons, founded on inference from the present appearance & condition of the timber, as some evidence that it was so planted or left.—WELD-BLUNDELL v. WOLSELEY, [1903] 2 Ch. 664; 73 L. J. Ch. 45; 89 L. T. 59; 51 W. R. 635; 47 Sol. Jo. 653.

901. — Cutting to avoid gaps.]—The ct. cannot determine what is ornamental timber, it being merely a matter of taste; they, therefore, say that what was planted for ornament must be considered as ornamental. If a tempest produces gaps in a piece of ornamental planting cutting a few trees to produce an uniform & consistent appearance would not be waste.—MAHON (LORD) v. STANHOPE (LORD) (1808), 3 Madd. 523, n.; 56 E. R. 597.

902. — Trees protecting house from sea.]—Deft. was tenant for life without impeachment of waste of an estate situated on the sea coast. He had assigned his life interest to R. in trust for his creditors. R. gave plffs., who were remaindermen, notice of his intention to cut timber, & plffs. sued for an injunction to restrain cutting:—Held: (1) an injunction should not be granted merely on sending a notice; (2) a general injunction against committing waste must be refused; (3) an injunction would not be granted against cutting timber or trees which protected the house or pleasure grounds from the effects of the sea.—COFFIN v. COFFIN (1821), Jac. 70; 6 Madd. 17; 37 E. R. 776.

903. — Where mansion-house pulled down.]—A mansion-house, park & pleasure grounds, with certain villas on the estate, were limited in strict settlement, & the trustees were empowered to grant building leases of the settled estates, & at the request of the tenant for life, to pull down the mansion-house, sell the materials, & apply the proceeds in paying off incumbrances on the estate. The house was pulled down, but the tenant for life unimpeachable for waste was afterwards restrained from felling the ornamental timber in the park & grounds.—*WELLESLEY v. 905. — Ceasing to be protected after mansion-house pulled down.]—A testator left his mansion-house on B. estate, went to reside on another estate at the distance of about eight miles, pulled down B. mansion-house, cut down some of the ornamental timber about it, turned the estate into a cover for game, & altogether acted so as to show that he had no intention that the mansion-house should be rebuilt:—Held: the rest of what had originally been ornamental timber on the B. estate was not, as between the parties claiming under the will, protected as ornamental, but might be cut by a tenant for life, whose estate was without impeachment of waste.

Testator, when he did the above acts, was only tenant for life in possession, with an ultimate reversion to himself in fee, expectant on the failure or determination of a subsequent estate for life & various estates tail which did not fail & determine till after his death:—Held: as between the parties claiming under his will, the case stood on the same footing as if he had been entitled in fee simple in possession.

Testator devised his estates to A. for life without impeachment of waste, "except voluntary waste in pulling down houses & not rebuilding the same or others of equal or greater value." A. pulled down the mansion-house, with the intention of forthwith building a better one on the site, & was proceeding with all reasonable dispatch to carry such intention into effect:—Held: the person entitled to the next vested remainder was not entitled to have a receiver of the rents appointed in order to secure the rebuilding of the mansion.—*MICKLETHWAIT v. 906. — New mansion-house.]—Pltf. was tenant in tail in remainder, & deft. tenant pur autre vie of an estate settled in 1855. At the date of the settlement there was no mansion-house on the estate, but one was acquired in 1859 by exchange under a power in the settlement. Deft. felled certain trees in the vicinity of the mansion-house, marked others for cutting, & advertised a sale of timber, & pltf. applied for an injunction:—Held: there must be an inquiry in the form adopted in Marker v. Marker (No. 890, ante) as to what trees could be cut without impairing the beauty of the place, or shelter given to the mansion-house as at the acquisition thereof in 1859, an undertaking by pltf. in damages, & an injunction as prayed, but conditional on pltf. giving such undertaking.—*ASHBY v. Security to reimburse the tenant for life, if wrongfully restrained, was ordered to be ascertained by the master; & issues were directed whether the timber, or any part, was planted or left standing for ornament or shelter by any former owner, of what estate & interest to be indorsed on the postea, & whether consistently with such purpose any & what part might be cut for repairs or sale.—WOMBWELL v. BELASYSE (1825), 6 Ves. 116; 31 E. On a bill filed by the possessor against claimant:—Held: (1) where deft. is in possession of an estate & pltf. claiming possession of it seeks to restrain him from cutting down trees & digging sods, & other such like acts, the ct. will not interfere, unless the acts complained of amount to such flagrant instances of spoliation as to justify it in departing from the general rule; 2) where pltf. is in possession & the person doing the acts complained of is an utter stranger, not claimant under colour of right, then the tendency of the ct. is not to grant an injunction, unless there are special circumstances, but to leave pltf. to his remedy at law, though if the acts tend to the destruction of the inheritance, the ct. will grant an injunction; (3) where pltf. in possession seeks to restrain one who claims by an adverse title, the tendency of the ct. will be to grant an injunction, at least when the acts committed do or may tend to the destruction of the estate; (4) as the acts of deft. might be injurious to the inheritance, he must be restrained by injunction from committing them.—*LOWNDES v. 936. — — ——Pltf. claimed to be entitled to real estates inalienably annexed to a title to an earldom by Act of Parliament. Defts., claiming under a will of the late earl, by favour of some of the tenants had cut down timber on the estates, some of an ornamental character & some not ripe for cutting. Pltf. sued, pending proceedings to establish his claim to the earldom, for the appointment of a receiver & for an injunction against the cutting of timber:—Held: (1) the waste alleged was not such as to justify interference; (2) the ct. would not interfere to restrain waste at the instance of a party claiming the property under a legal title against parties in possession, except where the waste was malicious or destructive, such as no owner would do or which would destroy the property before they could be arrested at law.—*TALBOT (EARL) v. 937. Where damages would compensate.—An information filed by the A.-G. suggested that an information had been previously filed against deft. for an encroachment by him on the royal forest of W. by inclosing land therein (about 12 acres) with a ditch & fence, & that, pending the judgment of the ct. on a demurrer in that cause, deft. had very lately commenced cutting down & clearing away all the holly trees & underwood on the land so inclosed by him, such trees, etc., being part of the vert & covert of the forest. The later information prayed that deft. might be restrained from cutting any more trees or underwood growing within the forest. The answer stated that deft. was seised in fee of the locus in quo by having bought it three years before, that it was not part of or within the forest, & that he cut the holly trees & underwood at the proper season & in the course of the proper management of the estate as it had been cut for the last twenty years:—Held: (1) the vert of a forest was a necessary part of it; (2) as no irreparable injury to the vert was shown, the act of deft., assuming the locus in quo to be within the forest, was a trespass in the nature of waste, which might be compensated in damages; (3) no injunction could be granted.—A.-G. v. HALLETT (1847), 16 M. & W. 569; 16 L. J. Ex. 131; 8 L. T. O. S. 450; 11 J. P. 744; 153 E. R. 1316.

On evidence that what had been done was necessary to admit the growth of contiguous trees, that the timber produced was of very small value & had been applied to repairs:—Held: (1) the father could not justify himself in equity by saying the waste was productive of beauty & improvement; (2) the acts were too trivial for the ct. to act upon, although the ct. would act on a small degree of waste manifesting an intent to do more; (3) pltf. to succeed must satisfy the ct. that the property was put into some hazard; (4) pltf.'s proceeding having been dilatory, an injunction was refused.—*BARRY v. 940. Parties—Security for costs—Acquiescence.]—Where a tenant for life without impeachment of waste had sold a quantity of timber trees, which the ct. afterwards restrained him from felling, on the supposition that it would be equitable waste:—Held: (1) the purchasers of the timber were not necessary parties to the injunction suit; (2) pltf. must give security to deft., not only for the value of all the trees which deft. should be prevented from cutting by the injunction, but also for any loss or damage deft. might incur or sustain by reason of his being prevented from completing the sale.

945. ———.]—A lessor during the term cut down some oak pollards growing upon the demised premises which were unfit for timber:—Held: (1) as a tenant for life or years would have been entitled to them, if they had been blown down, & was entitled to the usufruct of them during the term, the lessor could not, by wrongfully severing them, acquire any right to them; (2) he or his vendee could not maintain trespass against the tenant for taking them.—*CHANNON v. 958. ———.]—A tenant for life without impeachment of waste cut a quantity of ornamental timber. The first tenant in tail was then nine years old; on his coming of age he joined his father in disentail & in resettlement. The tenant for life died thirty years after cutting timber:—Held: (1) an account would be directed against the estate of the tenant for life even thirty-eight years after the waste was committed; (2) time ran against pltf.'s right only from the date of his becoming entitled in possession.

A tenant for life, with remainder to his son in fee, wrongfully cut timber in the years 1831, 1842, & subsequent years, & appropriated the proceeds to his own use. The son attained his majority in 1834, & died in 1844, intestate, & the tenant for life took out letters of administration to his estate. The tenant for life died in 1864. 969. Tree falling across highway.]—Where a tree, blown down in a violent gale, has fallen across a highway so as to cause an obstruction thereto, the occupier of the land over which the tree was growing is under no obligation by virtue of either s. 65 or s. 72 of Highway Act, 1835 (c. 50), to light the tree or to warn persons passing along the highway of the existence of the obstruction.—HUDSON v. BRAY, [1917] 1 K. B. 520; 86 L. J. K. B. 576; 116 L. T. 122; 81 J. P. 105; 33 T. L. R. 118; 61 Sol. Jo. 234; 15 L. G. R. 156.

970. Duty to protect public from danger—Lighting].—Defts., an urban authority acting under Public Health Act Amendment Act, 1890 (c. 20), s. 43, planted trees in certain of their highways, & surrounded each tree with an iron spiked guard. Subsequent to the erection of the guards an order was made under Defence of the Realm Regulations, by which all street lights in defts.' area were ordered to be extinguished at a certain hour. Pltf., who was crossing a road at night in the darkness, came into contact with one of the guards & suffered very serious injury. In an action to recover damages:

968 i. Ownership.]—The owner of land adjoining a highway has, under R. S. BELL (1891), 7 Nfld. L. R. 564. —NFLD.

970 i. Duty to protect public from danger—Overhanging trees.]—The liability to keep in repair extends to overhanging trees liable to fall upon the road & cause damage to passers by.

felled a tree, which in falling lodged against another tree near the road, & being left there, afterwards fell & killed pltf.'s wife while passing along the road:—Held: defts. liable.—GILCHRIST v. CARDEN (TOWNSHIP) (1876), 26 C. P. 1.—CAN.

970 ii. ———.]—The owner of property, on which trees grow close to a public thoroughfare, is liable for damages caused by the fall through decay of a branch on a passer-by, & for accidents that happen in consequence of his failure to have them properly inspected & pruned.—LAMARCHE v. for negligence, the jury found that the guard was dangerous in the circumstances of the darkness that existed, & that defts. had not taken reasonable measures to neutralise the danger, & the judge entered judgment for pltf.:—Held: after the promulgation of the lighting order there was a continuing duty on defts. to take reasonable measures to prevent the guard from being a danger to the public lawfully using the road, & pltf. was entitled to maintain his action.—*MORRISON v. ## Part X.—Fertilisers, Feeding Stuffs and Seeds.

NOTE.—The Acts on this subject are Adulteration of Seeds Act, 1869 (c. 112), Fertilisers, etc., Act, 1893 (c. 56), & Fertilisers, etc., Act, 1906 (c. 27), referred to respectively as Act of 1869, Act of 1893, & Act of 1906.

971. Seeds—Dyeing—Act of 1869, s. 3.]—Resp. sold old white clover seed, which he had previously subjected to sulphur smoking, as young white clover seed; he was summoned, & the police magistrate dismissed the summons on the ground that no offence was proved under the Act:—Held: the magistrate was right, for there had been no “adulteration” of the seed, nor had it been given the appearance of seed “of another kind” within s. 2 of the Act, but only “of another quality,” & there was no offence under the Act.—FRANCIS v. MAAS (1878), 3 Q. B. D. 341; 47 L. J. M. C. 83; 38 L. T. 100; 42 J. P. 392; 26 W. R. 422.

972. False invoice—Evidence—Act of 1893, s. 5.]—An analysis by the district analyst & the taking of samples in accordance with the above sect. are not conditions precedent to a prosecution by a county council under the Act. An invoice that states the article “contains 38 to 45 per cent. total phosphates,” whereas it contains only about 31 per cent., is false in a material particular to the prejudice of the purchaser within s. 3 (1) (b) of the Act, notwithstanding that the invoice states “Minimum guaranteed subject to conditions printed on the back hereof,” & such conditions make provision that, if on analysis the phosphates are below the minimum, a pro rata allowance will be made to the purchaser.

K., the managing director of the sellers of an article, was cognisant of the form of the invoice used. He signed letters proving that he knew that the article contained various uncertain proportions of phosphates that might have to be ascertained in a particular way. It appeared that sales of the article would come under his notice, & the invoice would not be sent out with a guarantee without his knowledge, but there was no evidence that he saw the particular invoice:—Held: there was evidence upon which K. might be convicted of aiding & abetting the commission of an offence under the above sect.—KORTEN v. WEST SUSSEX COUNTY COUNCIL (1903), 72 L. J. K. B. 514; 88 L. T. 466; 67 J. P. 167; 19 T. L. R. 354; 20 Cox, C. C. 402; 1 L. G. R. 445.

Annotations:—Folld. Laird v. Dobell, [1906] 1 K. B. 131. Refd. Needham v. Worcestershire County Council (1909), 100 L. T. 901.

973. Guilty knowledge—Act of 1893, s. 3 (1) b.]—Guilty knowledge that an invoice is false in a material particular is not necessary under the above sect. It is sufficient if the description is in fact untrue.

PART X.

971 i. Seeds—Sale of unclean seed—Measure of damages.]—Pltf. bought seed barley from deft. guaranteed to be clean. The seed was sown, & it was afterwards discovered that it was mixed with a weed called wild vetches or wild peas, which took root & grew up with the barley. Pltf. had not sustained any damage to his crop. In an action to recover damages for depreciation in the value of the farm:—Held: pltf. should have been allowed to substantiate, if he could, that the necessary consequence of sowing the foul seed was to lower appreciably the value of the farm.—McMULLEN v. FREE (1887), 13 O. R. 57.—CAN.

971 ii. —.]—Where seed is delivered, without any warranty, by one person, honestly believing it to be clean, to another, to be grown on the land of the latter, the produce thereof to be returned & paid for at a fixed price per bushel, the transaction is a bailment & not a sale, & damages arising from other innocuous seed having been mixed therewith, & on harvesting having become scattered on the ground & coming up the following year on the land, are too remote.—STEWART v. SCULTHORP (1894), 25 O. R. 544.—CAN.

971 iv. — “Wilfully” giving false name & address of person from whom procured.]—The manager of a shop, in which agricultural seeds were kept for sale, gave to an officer of the Department of Agriculture & Technical Instruction for Ireland a sample of certain agricultural seeds, & stated that the seeds had been procured from a certain firm in Belfast. In fact the seeds had not been procured there:—Held: the owner of the shop was guilty of an offence under Weeds & Agricultural Seeds (Ireland) Act, 1909 (c. 31), s. 5 (2), the word “wilfully” in the sub-sect. meaning “intentionally,” & not by mistake or inadvertence.—DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE v. BURKE, [1915] 2 I. R. 128; 49 I. L. T. 84.—IR.

971 v. — Method of taking samples—Delivery in bags & delivery in bulk—Act of 1893.]—Regulations made under the above Act provided for a method of taking samples where the stuff was delivered in two or more bags, & another method where it was delivered in bulk:—Held: (1) (LORD O'BRIEN, C.J. & PALLES, C.B.) delivery in one bag did not come under either head, & was a casus omissus in the regulations, & delivery in bulk meant delivery in a loose & unpacked condition; (2) (MADDERN & WRIGHT, JJ.) delivery in one bag did not fall under the first head, but was delivery in bulk, & delivery in bulk meant delivery of the stuff, unseparated into packages.—CORK AGRICULTURAL COMRS. v. CLARK (1904), 38 I. L. T. 83.—IR.

971 vi. — “Official sampler”—Possession as carrier—Act of 1906.]—K. was a person appointed by the Department of Agriculture & Technical Instruction for Ireland as their sampler, to take samples of fertilisers & feeding stuffs for the purposes of the above Act. Defts. had in their possession in Cork a quantity of manure, consigned from Liverpool to merchants in Ireland. Their possession was solely as carriers. K. applied to defts. for permission to take samples of the manure, but defts. refused to allow him to do so:—Held: (1) K. was an “official sampler” within s. 8 (a), of the above Act; (2) defts. were persons entrusted for the time being with the charge or custody of an article within the sub-sect., & defts. were guilty of an offence under the sect.—DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE & KENNEDY v. CITY OF CORK STEAM PACKET CO., [1909] 2 I. R. 479.—IR.

An invoice described an article as "Galveston Dect. C.S. Cake Meal":—Held: no offence had been committed under ss. 2 & 3 (1) (a) of the Act for not adding to this description a statement whether it had been prepared from one substance or seed, or from more than one.—LAIRD v. DOBELL, [1906] 1 K. B. 131; 75 L. J. K. B. 163; 93 L. T. 842; 54 W. R. 506; 21 Cox, C. C. 66; 4 L. G. R. 232.

974. Offence—Act of 1906, s. 6 (1) (a), (b).]—A seller of an article for use as food for cattle or poultry, who delivers an invoice stating the percentage of oil & albuminoids contained in the article, does not, if the invoice is incorrect, commit an offence against s. 6 (1) (a), which requires the delivery of an invoice stating the percentage of oil & albuminoids, but his offence, if any, is against s. 6 (1) (b), which prohibits the delivery of an invoice false in any material particular to the prejudice of the purchaser.—NEEDHAM & Co. v. WORCESTERSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL (1909), 100 L. T. 901; 73 J. P. 293; 25 T. L. R. 471; 7 L. G. R. 595.

Annotation:—Distd. & Expld. Kyle v. Jewers (1914), 112 L. T. 422.

975. Failure to deliver invoice—Consent to prosecution—Act of 1906, ss. 6 (3), 12.]—Resps. in England sent to a purchaser in Ireland an article as food for cattle, & were prosecuted in England by the Department of Agriculture & Technical Instruction for Ireland, which had taken a sample of the article in Ireland & had it analysed there, for having failed without reasonable excuse to give to the purchaser an invoice as required by the above Act. The consent of the Board of Agriculture & Fisheries to the institution of the prosecution had not been obtained:—Held: (1) the consent of the Irish Department to the institution of the prosecution was not sufficient; (2) the consent of the Board of Agriculture & Fisheries was necessary under s. 6 (3) of the Act notwithstanding s. 12.—HILL v. PHOENIX VETERINARY SUPPLIES, LTD., [1911] 2 K. B. 217; 80 L. J. K. B. 669; 105 L. T. 73; 75 J. P. 321; 22 Cox, C. C. 508; 9 L. G. R. 731.

976. — Poultry food—Act of 1906, s. 1 (2).]—Resps. sold a quantity of poultry food without giving to the purchaser an invoice stating what were the respective percentages of oil & albuminoids contained in it. The food was composed of three substances, namely, (a) biscuits made by resps. by baking a cereal substance, (b) greaves, the refuse or sediment left in making tallow or soap grease, purchased by resps. in blocks, & (c) oyster shells broken to a suitable size. The biscuits were broken by resps.' machinery to the size required, & the greaves chopped to pieces; the broken fragments of biscuits, the pieces of greaves, & the broken pieces of oyster shells were then mixed together by the machinery, & the resulting mixture formed the poultry food:—Held: the food was an article artificially prepared "otherwise than by being mixed, broken, ground or chopped" within the above sub-sect., & resps. had committed an offence in failing to supply to the purchaser an invoice stating the percentages of oil & albuminoids contained in the food as required by that sub-sect.—LATHOM (LATHAM) v. SPILLERS & BAKERS, LTD., [1913] 2 K. B. 355; 82 L. J. K. B. 833; 108 L. T. 996; 77 J. P. 277; 23 Cox, C. C. 422; 11 L. G. R. 539.

Annotation:—Distd. & Expld. Worcestershire County Council v. Notley, [1914] 3 K. B. 330.

977. — Sharps—Act of 1906, s. 1 (2).]—Resps. sold for use as food for cattle or poultry an article called sharps, which contained oil & albuminoids. Sharps are an offal of wheat & are that part of the wheat which remains after the flour & bran have been removed, & are made in the following way. Wheat is taken in the whole grain & passed by the miller through his mill. The wheat meal thus made is then by mechanical means in the mill passed by air currents through a series of sieves, whereby it is separated & divided into three substances, namely, flour, sharps, & bran. The chemical composition of each of these three substances (when made) differs both from that of each other & from that of the original wheat. The mechanical process does not otherwise effect any chemical change:—Held (ROWLATT, J., diss.): (1) sharps were not an article which had been artificially prepared within the Act, & if they were, they were not artificially prepared otherwise than by being ground; (2) resps. were not bound to give to the purchaser an invoice stating the percentages of oil & albuminoids contained in the article.—WORCESTERSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL v. NOTLEY BROTHERS, [1914] 3 K. B. 330; 83 L. J. K. B. 1750; 111 L. T. 382; 78 J. P. 340; 30 T. L. R. 516; 24 Cox, C. C. 316; 12 L. G. R. 874.

978. — Insufficient invoice—Act of 1906, s. 6 (1) (a).]—Resp., on the sale of "greaves," gave an invoice stating merely that they contained "not less than 15 per cent. albuminoids & 2½ per cent. oil":—Held: resp. was properly summoned under the above sub-sect. for failing to give the invoice required by the Act, inasmuch as the invoice did not purport to comply with s. 1 (2).—KYLE v. JEWERS (1914), 84 L. J. K. B. 255; 112 L. T. 422; 79 J. P. 176; 24 Cox, C. C. 543; 13 L. G. R. 260.

Failure to deliver invoice—Consent to prosecution—Act of 1906, s. 6.]—A prosecution for an offence under s. 6 of the above Act cannot be instituted until the consent of the Department of Agriculture & Technical Instruction has first been obtained to such prosecution. Semble: such consent must be in writing, being the consent of a body corporate. Qu.: whether the Department of Agriculture & Technical Instruction can "appear as complainants" in prosecutions under the Act.—*DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE & MARCHBANK v. 979. Seeds blown on to adjoining land—Liability of owner of land.]—Deft. occupied certain land which had originally been forest land, but had recently been brought into cultivation. As soon as this land was brought into cultivation thistles sprang up all over it. Deft. neglected to cut these thistles, & the seeds were blown in large quantities on to the adjoining land, which was occupied by pltf. Pltf. having brought an action to recover damages from deft. for injury done to his land :—Held : deft. was under no duty towards pltf. to cut the thistles, which were the natural growth of the soil, & was not liable for damage caused to pltf.'s land.—GILES v. WALKER (1890), 24 Q. B. D. 656 ; 59 L. J. Q. B. 416 ; 62 L. T. 933 ; 54 J. P. 599 ; 38 W. R. 782.

In answer to a claim for rent, deft. attempted to show that he had sustained damage by reason of the ground being full of thistles, & that it had been stipulated that an allowance was to be made in such case for the loss to deft. :—Held : evidence was properly admitted for the guidance of the jury, in adjusting such allowance, as to how deft. had himself settled with other persons, who had thistles in their fields rented by him.—WEINHOLD v. KLEIN (1884), 10 A. R. 20.—CAN.

*t. Noxious weed—Duty to keep down.]—*An occupier of land is under no duty at common law to keep down a noxious weed, such as prickly pear, growing naturally on his land so as to prevent it from spreading or extending to his neighbour's land ; & if, owing to his failure to keep it down, it grows in such a way as to damage his neighbour's fence that is not sufficient to render him liable.—SPARKE v. OSBORNE (1908), 7 C. L. R. 51.—AUS.

PART XI. SECT. 10.

*a. Liability of landowner.]—*A person kindling a fire on his own land for the purpose of clearing it is not liable at all risks for any injurious consequences that may ensue to the property of his neighbours.—DEAN v. MCCARTY (1846), 2 U. C. R. 448.—CAN.

*b. —.]—*Where fire has been properly set out by a person on his land for the necessary purposes of husbandry, at a proper place, time & season, & managed with due care, he is not responsible for damage occasioned by it.—FURLONG v. CARROLL (1882), 7 A. R. 145.—CAN.

*c. — Landowner not insurer.]—*GILLSON v. NORTH GREY R. W. CO. (1874), 35 U. C. R. 475.—CAN.

*d. — Question for jury.]—*A man must exercise care & discretion as to the time & mode of clearing his land, & if his neighbour be injured by rashness or inconsiderateness on his part in setting out fire for that purpose, he will be liable to him ; but this is always a question for the jury.—WILKINS v. ROW (1865), 15 C. P. 325.—CAN.

*e. — Injury by wind suddenly rising.]—*Persons have a right to set out fire on their land for the purpose of clearing it, & if the flames spread under the influence of a wind suddenly arising, & cause damage to a neighbour, no action will lie without proof of negligence. It is a misdirection to tell the jury that defts. were bound to have anticipated the rising of the wind, & to use extraordinary caution.—BUCHANAN v. YOUNG (1873), 23 C. P. 101.—CAN.

*f. Injury by wind changing.]—*Deft., for the purpose of clearing his land, set out fire on same, but before so doing, consulted with pltf., who had some lumber piled on an adjoining lot, who agreed that the weather was favourable, the wind blowing in a direction away from pltf.'s property, & to prevent its spreading thereto, deft. burnt up the stubble, etc., around pltf.'s property. Subsequently there were indications of a change of wind, & deft. sent his son to watch the fire, but when the latter arrived on the ground, the wind was blowing a heavy gale, & the fire communicated to pltf.'s property, which was destroyed. Even if deft. had been watching he could not have prevented the fire spreading :—Held : deft. not liable.—MURPHY v. DALTON (1884), 5 O. R. 541.—CAN.

*h. — Proof of negligence.]—*In Aug. deft. set out fire on his own land for the purpose of clearing it. This fire continued to burn till Oct., when, in consequence of a very high wind, sparks were carried to pltf.'s land, & set fire to some ties & posts stored thereon :—Held : the question of deft.'s liability for negligence should be determined having regard to the circumstances existing in Oct., & not to those existing in Aug.—BEATON v. SPRINGER (1897), 24 A. R. 297.—CAN.

Part I.—What Constitutes Alienage.

NOTE.—The cases in this Part must be read subject to the provisions of British Nationality & Status of Aliens Act, 1914 (c. 17), which repealed 25 Edw. 3, stat. 1, Foreign Protestants (Naturalisation) Act, 1708 (c. 5), British Nationality Acts, 1730 (c. 21) & 1772 (c. 21), & Naturalisation Act, 1870 (c. 14).

SECT. 1.—BIRTH OUTSIDE ALLEGIANCE OF CROWN.

1. Persons born abroad.]—An alien is a subject that is born out of the ligeance of the King, & under the ligeance of another. Every man is either alienigena, an alien born, or subditus, a subject born. There are three incidents to a subject born: (1) that the parents be under the actual obedience of the King; (2) that the place of his birth be within the King's dominion; (3) the time of his birth is the date to be considered.

Antenati, i.e., persons born in Scotland before the union of the Crown in James I., were aliens born as regards England.—CALVIN'S CASE (1608), 7 Co. Rep. 1a; 2 State Tr. 559; 77 E. R. 377.

The introduction of the English law into a con-

18. — Father natural-born subject — British Nationality Act, 1730 (c. 21).]—By the Treaty of 1783 between Great Britain & the United States of America, Great Britain acknowledged the United States to be free, sovereign & independent States, & relinquished all claims to the Govt., proprietary & territorial rights of same, & every part thereof. After ratification of the Treaty, A. was born in Rhode Island of parents who had been born respectively in New York & Rhode Island before the Treaty & were British born, but who had since the Treaty continued to reside in the United States as subjects thereof:—Held: (1) the inhabitants of the United States at the time of the Treaty of 1783 became inhabitants of an independent State, & aliens by British law; (2) A.'s parents having before her birth ceased, under the Treaty, to be subjects of Great Britain, were not at the time of her birth "natural-born subjects" of Great Britain within s. 1 of the above Act; (3) A. was not by that Act made a natural-born British subject or capable of inheriting lands in England.

Some question was raised as to the meaning of the words "fathers, natural-born subjects of the Crown of Great Britain, at the time of the birth of their children." We think the sense of these words is very plain; natural-born subjects are mentioned as distinguished from subjects by donation, or any other mode. A child born out of the allegiance of the Crown of England is not entitled to be deemed a natural-born subject, unless the father be, at the time of the birth of the child, not a subject only, but a subject by birth. The two characters of the subject & subject by birth must unite in the father (ABBOTT C.J.).—DOE d. THOMAS v. ACKLAM (1824), 2 B. & C. 779; 2 State Tr. N. S. 105; 4 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 391; 2 L. J. O. D., though for a short time & an occasional purpose in Scotland in 1783, was domiciled in France till he emigrated from it in 1792:—Held: although, according to the above Acts, D. was formerly & literally a British subject, he was not a British subject within the treaty between Gt. allegiance, but whose parents afterwards marry & thereby, according to the law of Scotland, make him legitimate, is nevertheless an alien; for at the time of his birth he is filius nullius, & alienage attaches irreversibly.

A., who was born illegitimate in the United States of America, but whose father was alleged to be a domiciled Scotsman, & had married A.'s mother, filed a bill against B. B. had acted as solr. of A., when an infant, & had brought a suit in Scotland, in the name & on behalf of A. as such infant, for the purpose of trying the question whether A. was legitimate & entitled to succeed to his father's real estate in Scotland, in which suit the Ct. of Sess. made a decree declaring A. illegitimate, & the H.L. in 1808 affirmed that decree. The bill filed by A. charged that B. had conspired with others to defraud A. of the estate, had fraudulently concealed the fact that at the time of the death of A.'s father the domicil of such father was Scotch, & generally that B. knew or had reason to believe A. to be legitimate, & had obtained the decrees by fraud & collusion, & praying to be declared legitimate & the heir at-law, & to have possession of the estate delivered up:—Held: even assuming the domicil of A.'s father to be Scotch, A. was an alien, & not entitled to succeed to real estate in Scotland, & the bill must be dismissed.

By the terms of the oath, he abjured allegiance to any other State, etc. In 1787 A. married the daughter of an American citizen, & had issue a son B., who never came to this country, & died abroad, leaving a son C., who, according to the pedigree, was heir of testatrix, who died in 1839. In a suit instituted to administer her estate, C., by his answer filed in 1840, claimed to be her heir. Upon exceptions to the master's report finding C. to be the heir:—Held: (1) the treaty of 1783 did not apply to A., who had emigrated subsequently to that treaty; (2) the subsequent treaty of 1794 was local, & A. did not reside within the locality; (3) A. by his own acts had not, at the time of the birth of his child, absolved himself from his allegiance, nor divested himself of the character of a natural-born subject; (4) the exception in the Act of 1730 as to the father's being liable to the penalties of treason was referable to a well-known class of offences, & ought not to be extended, & C. under the above Acts and British Nationality Act, 1772 (c. 21), was entitled to all the rights & privileges of a natural-born subject, & capacitated thereby to take lands by descent.—*FITCH v. A female infant, aged twelve, was born & domiciled in France. Her father was also born & domiciled in France, but was the son of a natural-born British father. The mother was a natural-born French subject. In 1884 the father died intestate. The mother became entitled, by the law of France, to guardianship of the infant as surviving parent, but she was not a fit person to have the custody of children, & had been prohibited, by proceedings taken by the father, from visiting her daughter. Shortly after the father's death the mother instituted proceedings in France to obtain control of the infant, & about the same time an application was made by the infant in England by her next friend, in opposition to the mother, for appointment of guardians of the infant. The French cts. stayed proceedings in that country pending the application here. The infant was entitled to property in France, but not to any property in England:—Held: (1) the ct. ought to exercise its jurisdiction; (2) a reference must be made to chambers to inquire who were fit & proper persons to be appointed guardians.—Re WILLUGHBY (1885), 30 Ch. A. was by birth a German subject, but came to England & was denationalised, & in 1869 became a naturalised British subject, & again in 1877 under Naturalisation Act, 1870 (c. 14). Subsequently he lived in Germany & his son B. was born at Frankfurt-on-Main in 1884 :—Held : B. was not a British subject, as British Nationality Act, 1730 (c. 21), was confined to children born abroad of a natural-born British subject, & Naturalisation Acts, 1844 & 1870, did not place a naturalised subject on the same footing as a natural-born subject for this purpose.—*R. v. 27. — — — — —.]—Applt. was born in Germany, 1875. His parents were both aliens by birth, but after their marriage, & before the birth of applt., the father became a naturalised British subject under the above Act of 1844. Applt. continued to reside in Germany till the death of his father in 1887, but thereafter he came to England & he resided there during a portion of his infancy with his widowed mother, who, however, had not obtained a certificate of naturalisation in the United Kingdom :—Held : even assuming that applt.'s father, who was naturalised under the above Act of 1844, became entitled to the privileges conferred by the above Act of 1870, applt. did not obtain the status of British nationality under s. 10 (5) of the latter Act, for, although his mother, by virtue of her husband's naturalisation, became entitled to all the rights & privileges of a British subject, she had not obtained a certificate of naturalisation in the United Kingdom.—*JAFFÉ v. In the latter years he obtained a certificate of naturalisation according to the laws then in force in Cape Colony. Applt. was born in Berlin in 1893, & came to reside in England in 1913, before he was twenty-one years of age. In July, 1914, the whole of the family came to London & had resided there ever since. On an information preferred against applt. under Aliens Restriction (Consolidation) Ord., 1914, made in pursuance of Aliens Restriction Act, 1914 (c. 12) :—Held : upon the above evidence the nationality of applt.'s father (&, therefore, the nationality of applt. himself) was left in doubt, & applt. had not discharged the onus imposed upon him by the Act of proving that he was not an alien enemy, & applt. was rightly convicted.—*KOPPELOWITZ v. In 1896 his father became a naturalised American, & in 1897 applt. came to this country & had resided here ever since. On a summons against applt. for failing to report himself for military service, he contended that he was an American citizen. By American law the naturalisation of the parents conferred American citizenship upon the minor children, & such citizenship should begin at the time such minor children began to reside permanently in the United States. The justices held applt. never began to reside permanently in the United States &, therefore, could not be an American subject, & they convicted him :—Held : (1) the permanent residence necessary to confer American citizenship on applt. could only begin at the date of the father's naturalisation, & applt.'s residence in the United States from the date of his birth down to the date of his father's naturalisation could not be taken into account ; (2) there was evidence to support the justices finding that applt. never began to reside permanently in the United States, & their decision must be affirmed.—*ATKINSON v. five persons, whose names appeared in the list of electors & who signed a petition for repealing a bye-law, were aliens:—Held: (1) it was for the opponents of the petition to show affirmatively that the five men were disqualified by reason of being aliens, & it was to be presumed that the names were properly on the list, until the contrary was shown; (2) in the case of persons born in the United States, who had lived for thirteen years in Canada, but had not been naturalised, it was necessary in order to disqualify them to show that their parents were not British subjects.—*R. e. ——— Copy of Secretary of State's certificate readmitting party to British nationality.]—O. was charged with having, in June, 1913, acted as member of a county council, when disqualified by reason of his being an alien. He was a natural-born British subject, who had been in America for a number of years, & it was alleged that while there he had become a naturalised citizen of the United States. The evidence given on behalf of complainant was: (a) the statement of a witness that O. had some years previously told him he was a naturalised American citizen; (b) a copy of a certificate by the Home Secretary readmitting O. to the status of a British subject as from Sept. 10, 1913, which certificate recited that O. had presented a memorial alleging that he had become a naturalised American citizen & praying to be readmitted to the status of a British subject. The copy purported to be certified by an under-secretary of State, but no evidence was given of his signature or authority to issue a certified copy:—Held: even assuming that the copy of the certificate was admissible, the justices were not bound to convict on the evidence.—*R. His defence was (inter alia) that he was a Scotch subject, born before his father's naturalisation in England, & did the acts charged as part of his duty in obedience to the Parliament of Scotland apparently on the ground that he was postnatus:—Held: (1) accused not lawfully in arms against this country; (2) he was guilty.—HAMILTON (DUKE) & CAMBRIDGE'S (EARL) CASE (1649), 4 State Tr. 1155.

42. Birth in hostile territory in occupation of English troops—Father English subject.]—There are subjects of England, who are born subjects to a prince holding his kingdom as homager & liegeman to the King of England, during the time of his being homager. Hence in the Middle Ages, while the homage of the Kings of Scotland to the Kings of England was regarded as continuing, a Scotchman was not an alien in England. If the King of England enter with his army, as an enemy, the territories of another prince, & any be born of English subjects within the places possessed by the King's army, & within his protection, such person is a subject born of England.—CRAW (CROW) v. RAMSEY (1670), Vaugh. 274; 2 Vent. 1; Cart. 185; 2 Keb. 601; T. Jo. 10; 124 E. R. 1072.

43. Birth in British Dominions—Naturalisation Act, 1870 (c. 14).]—One who is born within any part of the King's dominions is a natural-born subject of the Crown, & since the Crown is one & indivisible, he cannot claim to belong to a separate part of the King's dominions or to a separate nationality. To do so would be to deny allegiance to the King as supreme over the whole Empire as one Empire.—Re JOHNSON, ROBERTS v. A.-G., [1903] 1 Ch. 821; 72 L. J. Ch. 682; 88 L. T. 161; 51 W. R. 441; 19 T. 44. ——— Not "subject" of colony.]—The fact that a person is born in a British colony does not make him a "subject" of that colony, so as to make a judgment recovered against him in his absence in the colonial ct. enforceable in this country.

Deft. was born in the colony of Victoria, Australia, & resided twenty-six years there, until 1890, when he came to live in England. Neither of his parents was born in Victoria. Since 1890 he visited Victoria on several occasions, the last being in 1906. In 1911 pltffs. issued a writ against him in the Supreme Ct. of Victoria to recover a sum of money due on accounts stated. The writ was served on deft. in England; he did not appear, & pltffs. signed judgment in the Victorian ct. against him in default of appearance. In an action in England upon the judgment, pltffs. contended that, as deft. was born in Victoria, he was a "subject" of that colony, & the judgment was enforceable here:—Held: (1) deft. was a subject of the King, not a "subject" of Victoria so as to render the judgment recovered against him in his absence binding upon him in this country; (2) the judgment was not enforceable here.—GIBSON (GAVIN) & Co., LTD. v. England with the British troops. After two years he went to New York in the employment of the British Govt., & on the termination of his employment settled in the United States of America, married there a British-born subject, & had children, & continued there till his death in 1812:—Held: (1) since he did not put off his allegiance at the time of the treaty, he could not do so afterwards; (2) he remained a British subject, & his children were entitled to take land in England by descent under the above Act.—*DOE v. ### SECT. 3.—OTHER CASES.

48. Company trading under British charter—Some members foreigners.]—A co. was incorporated by charter for the purpose of providing vessels & employing them in the Pacific Ocean. Some of the members of the corp. were foreigners:

—Held: (1) the corp. was a British subject within 8 & 9 Vict. c. 89, s. 5, so far as such a term could be applicable to a corp., notwithstanding some foreigners might individually have shares in the co.; (2) the co. was entitled to have the ships registered.—*R. v. 49. Company registered under foreign law.]—A gold mining co. registered under the law of the South African Republic had a London office, but its head office was at Johannesburg. Most of its shareholders were resident outside the Republic & were not subjects thereof. Gold, on which the co. had effected an insurance against "arrests of princes," was seized by the Govt. of the Republic on Oct. 2, 1899, in immediate contemplation of war with Great Britain. War broke out on Oct. 11, & an action on the policy was brought by the co. during the war. The parties, being desirous of obtaining a decision on the merits, waived the objection that the remedy was suspended:—Held: the underwriters were liable.

I assume that the corp. was to all intents & purposes in the position of a natural-born subject of the late South African Republic. I do not think it can be entitled to any exceptional favour or to any peculiar indulgence by reason of the fact that the bulk of its shareholders were of European nationality. If all its members had been subjects of the British Crown the corp. itself would have been none the less a foreign corp. & none the less in regard to Great Britain an alien (LORD MACNAGHTEN).—*JANSON v. ## Part II.—Rights, Liabilities, and Disabilities of Aliens in Time of Peace.

SECT. 1.—GENERAL POSITION IN REGARD TO BRITISH LAW.

50. Power of legislature to bind foreigners.]—In endeavouring to put a construction on a stat., it must be borne in mind how far the power of the British legislature extends, for unless the words are so clear that a contrary construction can in way be avoided, I must presume that the legislature did not intend to go beyond this power. The laws of Great Britain affect her own subjects everywhere—foreigners only when within her own jurisdiction. Attempts have been made, as in trying to enforce custom's laws, to bind foreigners out of our own jurisdiction, & great inconvenience has resulted therefrom (DR. LUSHINGTON).—THE ZOLLVEREIN (1856), Sw. 96; 27 L. T. O. S. 160; 2 Jur. N. S. 429; 4 W. R. 555.

51. —.]—The Instance Ct. of Admiralty is a municipal ct., & it is bound to obey the stats. of the realm in all matters. Whatever may be my opinion as to the absence of power in the British legislature to bind foreigners in transactions out of the realm, yet if Parliament chose to make a clear enactment that foreigners should be bound in cases where, in my opinion, it had no such power, I should be bound to obey the Act of Parliament. But if the expressions used be doubtful as to the operation upon foreigners, the doubt ought to be solved by holding that the enactment does not operate upon them (DR. LUSHINGTON).—THE JOHANNES (1860), 1 Lush. 182; 30 L. J. P. M. & A. 91; 3 L. T. 757; 1 Mar. L. C. 24.

52. Subject to law—Tacit submission thereto.—Aliens living in England tacitly submit themselves to our laws & forms of law-making, so their grant & consent is involved in the consent of Parliament.—COURTEEN'S CASE (1618), Hob. 270; 80 E. R. 416.

VANVLISSENGEN (1851), 9 Hare, 415; 21 L. J. Ch. 97; 18 L. T. O. S. 192; 16 Jur. 115; 68 E. R. 571.

54. — Expatriation as British merchant.—If a merchant expatriates himself as a merchant to carry on the trade of another country, exporting its produce, paying its taxes & employing its people, & expending his spirit, industry, & capital in its service, he is to be deemed a merchant of that country, notwithstanding he may in some respects be less favoured in that country than one of its native subjects. A British subject resident in a foreign country is entitled to all the privileges of the neutral nation whilst he resides in it. Persons residing in England must, for the purposes of trade, be considered as belonging to it. A British merchant resident in a foreign country must part with some commercial privileges which he would preserve if resident at home, whilst he acquires others by residence abroad.

Goods had been shipped from an American port to Halifax & transhipped from there to Newfoundland by A., an English merchant, who resided in America & had expatriated himself. The goods were condemned for a breach of 12 Car. 2, c. 18, which provided that no "alien" should exercise the trade or occupation of a factor or merchant in the plantations, etc.:—Held: (1) A. must be regarded as an American, not as a British, merchant; (2) the importation to Newfoundland was illegal.—THE MATCHLESS (1822), 1 Hag. Adm. 97.

55. — Alien in British colony.—Every alien coming into a British colony becomes temporarily a subject of the Crown—bound by, subject to, & entitled to the benefit of the laws which affect all British subjects (TURNER, L.J.).—LOW v. ROUTLEDGE (1865), 1 Ch. App. 42; 35 L. J. Ch. 114; 13 L. T. 421; 30 J. P. 4; 14 W. R. 90, C.A.; affd. (1868), L. R. 3 H. L. 100, H. L.

56. — Writ of ne exeat regno.—A writ ne exeat regno may be obtained against an alien resident in England; but it is very delicate to interfere against foreigners, whose occasions or misfortunes have brought them here, by an application of this writ to them; it is a necessary term that it shall be simply a case of equity, affording no ground to sue at law.—DE CARRIERE v. DE CALONNE (1799), 4 Ves. 577; 31 E. R. 297.

57. — Poor law settlement.—A foreigner may gain a settlement here for the purpose of the poor laws, by complying with the statutory provisions as to occupation of a tenement of £10 a year & otherwise.—R. v. EASTBOURNE (INHABITANTS) (1803), 4 East, 103; 102 E. R. 769.

52 i. Subject to law—Knowledge of law presumed.—A foreigner contracting in Scotland is presumed to know the laws in the same manner as one of the lieges, & cannot resile an alleged ignorance.—CLOUP & PELLISSIE v. ALEXANDER (1831), 9 Sh. (Ct. of Sess.) 418.—SCOT.

Columbia may be arrested on a cause of action which has arisen in a foreign country.—MACAULAY v. O'BRIEN (1897), 5 B. C. R. 510.—CAN.

the intent to defraud his creditors, he is subject to arrest as it prevails in Ontario.—KERSTERMAN v. McLELLAN (1883), 10 P. R. 122.—CAN.

the same as the ordinary joint stock shares in cos. in England, applied for registration. The seven shareholders who made the application were all resident abroad, & the first directors nominated were foreigners, & only one of them appeared to have even a temporary residence in England. The articles of assocn. referred in several places to the English law, & especially to Cos. Act, 1862 (c. 89). There was an office of the co. in Westminster, but it was doubtful whether any general meeting was intended to be held in London, or other place in England. The registrar granted its registration:—Held: (1) he was lawfully entitled so to do, but he was not bound to refuse registration, & the registration having been thus actually made, the usual legal consequences of registration arose; (2) if the circumstances occurred which, by s. 79 of the above Act, were such as, in the opinion of the ct., made it "just & equitable" that the co. should be wound up, the ct. might lawfully & properly issue the order for winding it up.—*REUSS (PRINCESS) v. p. Court no power to compel aliens to litigate.—Under an agreement with respect to a mining property in Ontario, payment was to be made in a foreign country to foreigners residing therein, by a person also residing therein, of a sum of money for each ton of ore mined by him:—Held: the ct. had no jurisdiction to compel foreigners to come to the Province with their claim & litigate it, the debt in question having no existence there.—Re BENFIELD & STEVENS (1897), 17 P. R. 339.—CAN.

63 i. Personal action — Action by foreign bank on notes.—Money had & received.—A foreign bank cannot sue upon notes received by them in the conduct of banking business in Ontario, cause suing is a consequence of protection. If an alien enemy comes hither sub salvo conductu, he may maintain an action; if an alien amy comes hither in time of peace by the King's licence, & lives here under his protection, & a war afterwards begins between the two nations, he may maintain an action; as suing is but a consequential right of protection, & wars at this day are not so implacable as heretofore.—*WELLS v. 62. ——Alien friends have a right to institute suits in the cts. for recovery of their rights; they come into England either, as formerly, with a letter of safe conduct, or under a tacit permission which presumes that authority. If they continue to reside here after war breaks out between the two countries, they remain under that protection & are impliedly temporary subjects of this kingdom. If the right of suing for redress of injuries were not allowed them, the protection would be incomplete & merely nominal. This claim to the protection of our cts. does not apply to aliens who adhere to the King's enemies. They are incapacitated from suing either at law or in equity.—*DAUBIGNY v. 63. Personal action—Debt.—An alien living in France brought a writ of debt in the Common Pleas. Objection was taken that being an alien he could not sue in England:—Held: an alien, unless the subject of a State at war with England, could maintain a personal action in the English cts., but in real actions the plea of alienage was good, for no alien could have land within the realm unless a denizen.—ANON. (1514), 1 Dyer, 2b; 73 E. 54 Geo. 3, c. 156.]—A foreign author, residing abroad, who composes & publishes his work abroad, has not, at common law, or under the above Acts, any copyright in England. Therefore, a person to whom he transfers abroad, by an instrument not under seal, but which is valid according to the law of that country, the copyright of the work in England, has no right of action against a British subject who afterwards publishes the work in England.—*CHAPPELL (CHAPPLE) v. 94. ———.]—The above Act of 1709 (as to copyright) must be construed as referring to British authors only. A British stat. must prima facie be understood to legislate for British subjects only, & there are no special circumstances in the Act relating to authors leading to the notion that a more extended range was meant to be given to its enactments. When I say that the Legislature must prima facie be taken to legislate only for its own subjects, I must be taken to include under the word "subjects" all persons who are within the Queen's dominions & who thus owe to her a temporary allegiance. I do not doubt but that a foreigner resident here & composing & publishing a book here is an author within the Act; he is within its words & spirit. I go further; I think that if a foreigner, having composed but not having published a work abroad, were to come to this country & the week or day after his arrival were to print & publish it here, he would be within the protection of the Act. But if at the time when copyright commences by publication the foreign author is not in this country, he is not a person whose interests the stat. meant to protect (LORD CRANWORTH, C.).

An alien friend may possess any description of personal property in England, & maintain any action in respect of it applicable to the nature of the wrong. Robert had issue three daughters; Nicholas had issue two sons, Patrick & William, born in England; John had no issue; George had issue a son, John. John became Earl of Holderness, & both he & George were naturalised by Acts of Parliament, which gave them the right of inheritance to ancestors lineal & collateral as fully as if they had been natural-born subjects in England, George being naturalised before he had issue. John by his will devised lands in England to the heir of Nicholas. John & George died, Nicholas dying after the making of John's will. against him:—Held: (1) the devise was void because Nicholas was alive & none could be heir to a living person; (2) Nicholas being an alien could not have an heir in England, & hence Patrick had no title; (3) the naturalisation of Nicholas in Ireland by enactment of the Parliament holden 10 Car. 1, in Ireland, that all persons of the Scottish nation should be reputed the King's natural subjects to all intents, constructions, & purposes of that his realm of Ireland as if born there, did not naturalise him in England so as to make him inheritable to lands in England; (4) (in Ex. 103. —The law will not enable an alien by act of his own, either first to transfer by hereditary descent, for the alien dying, having since a denizen born, the land will not descend, or secondly to take by an act in law, for the law quæi nihil frustra facit will not give him an inheritance or freehold by act in law, for he cannot keep it. If the eldest son be an alien, the law takes no notice of him, & therefore, as he shall not take by descent so he shall not impede the descent to his younger brother. . . . Sir Edward Coke is of opinion that if an alien have two sons born in England & one die without issue, the other shall not inherit him. It was otherwise with the case of an alien or bastard, both of whom were incapable, by the general laws of the realm, to inherit.—SMITH v. READ (1737), West temp. Hard. 16; 2 Eq. Cas. 107. Real property descending on English wife of alien—Settlement on husband.—On the marriage of S., an English lady, with C., a foreigner, certain reversionary stock to which the wife was entitled was settled in trust for the husband & wife for life, then for their children, with trusts over, & certain reversionary real estates of the wife were conveyed to trustees to sell, & the proceeds were settled in the same way as the reversionary stock. The settlement contained a declaration by the parties that all real & personal estate which should come to the wife during coverture should be settled on the same trusts as were declared of the reversionary stock, & the husband covenanted to do all acts, either alone or with the concurrence of the wife, necessary for so settling such property. He continued an alien, & two of the children of the marriage were aliens born, the others English-born. Certain real estates came to the wife during coverture by descent:—Held: (1) they were bound by the trusts of the settlement declared concerning the reversionary stock; (2) as a settlement in specie would defeat the common object of the parties by giving interests to the husband & foreign-born children in land which they could not hold, the property ought first to be sold & the purchase-money settled.—*MASTERS v. 120. Intestacy on failure of trust.]—A testator, who died in 1827, by will made in 1826, devised real estate to trustees, in trust to convey it “to the heir-at-law of my heir-at-law now in America.” Testator had a nephew living in America, who was an alien, & who, but for being an alien, would at the date of the will have been testator’s heir presumptive, & would on his death have been his heir-at-law. This nephew died in 1833, leaving a son, also an alien:—Held (STUART, V.-C.): (1) the great-nephew was the person designated by the will, but being an alien, he could not take under the trust; (2) the Crown had no equity to take the benefit of a trust in favour of an alien; (3) the trustees could not hold for their own benefit, & the person who would have been entitled in case of an intestacy was entitled; (4) (on appeal) there was an intestacy as to the equitable interest in the devised real estate, & the decree must be affirmed on this ground, without any reference to the question whether the Crown could claim the benefit of a trust declared in favour of an alien.—*RITSON v. 122. —.]—Lands were conveyed in Mar., 1862, by two tenants in common, L. & S., to a trustee upon trust to sell & to hold the proceeds in trust for L. & S. in equal shares, & as to the share of S. for her separate use. The indenture contained powers of exchange & partition; & it was declared that until the sale the trustee should hold the lands upon trust as to one moiety for L., & as to the other moiety for S. for her separate use. In Apr., 1862, it was agreed that the trustee should allot the lands described in the first schedule to L., & those described in the second schedule to S., & should stand possessed of the allotments upon the same trusts as were by the deed of Mar., 1862, declared of the respective moieties, but without prejudice to the powers vested in the trustee by that indenture. S. was a married woman, & her husband was an alien. By her will, made in Aug., 1862, she gave all her landed property situated at E., being her allotment under the agreement of Apr., 1862, which still remained unsold, to her husband for life, with remainder over:—Held: (1) the trust for sale had been put an end to by the agreement of Apr., 1862, & the property passed as real estate under the will of S.; (2) the Ct. of Ch. would enforce in favour of the Crown a trust of land for an alien created before Naturalisation Act, 1870 (c. 14).

The law does not recognise the possibility of an alien acquiring real estate by act of law; for instance, an alien cannot take as heir or as dowress, the reason assigned being that the law would not do so useless a thing as to cast that on a person which he cannot hold; but at the same time it is undisputed law that gifts may be made to aliens by will, or feoffment, use, covenant to stand seised, or the like, so that a purchase may undoubtedly be made by an alien in his own name, or may be made in trust for him. In that state of things the law says that the title or interest so acquired shall be held, not for his own use, but for the use of the Crown; so that if it be a legal estate he holds it until office found for the Crown, & when office is found that act relates back to the time when the estate vested in the alien, & then it becomes vested in the Crown (LORD HATHERLEY, C.).—SHARP v. ST. SAUVEUR (1871), 7 Ch. App. 343; 41 L. J. Ch. 576; 26 L. T. 142; 20 W. R. 269, L. C.

148. —.—.—.]—Turks & infidels are not perpetui inimici, nor is there a particular enmity between them & us; but this is a common error founded on a groundless opinion of Brooke, J.; for though there is a difference between our religion & theirs, that does not oblige us to be enemies to their persons; they are the creatures of God, & of the same kind as we are, & it would be a sin in us to hurt their persons.—ANON. (1697), 1 Salk. 46; 91 E. 150. —.—.—.]—Time & occupation.—Time is the grand ingredient in constituting domicile (i.e., commercial domicile for purposes of prize law & trading with the enemy); in most cases it is unavoidably conclusive. Even residence in a country for a special purpose—such as to carry on a lawsuit—may, if prolonged, become a general residence. Suppose a man comes into a belligerent country at or before the beginning of a war, it is reasonable not to bind him too soon to an acquired character, & to allow him a fair time to disengage himself; if he continues to reside during a good part of the war, contributing, by payment of taxes, etc., to the strength of that country, he could not plead his special purpose with any effect against the rights of hostility. If he could, there would be no sufficient guard against fraud & abuses of masked, pretended, original & sole purposes of a long-continued residence. Time is the great agent in this matter; it is to be taken in a compound ratio of time & occupation, with a great preponderance on the article of time. It cannot happen, but with few exceptions, that length of time shall not constitute a domicile.

If a house of trade sends a partner to France, although with an intention of not mixing in any other trade than the business of that house, such a circumstance, connected with a permanent residence in France, would impress a national character upon him.—THE HARMONY (1800), 2 Ch. Rob. 322.

151. —.—.—.]—Place of residence & carrying on trade.—Persons resident in a country carrying on trade, by which both they & the country are benefited, are to be considered as subjects of that country, & are considered so by the law of nations, at least so far as by that law to subject their property to capture by a country at war with that in which they live.

An American, who resides with his family in England, is so far considered as a British subject that if on an insurance a ship of his is warranted to be American property, there is a breach of warranty, & on capture the loss cannot be recovered on the policy.—TABBS v. BENDELACK (1801), 3 Bos. & P. 207, n.; 4 Esp. 108; 127 E. R. 114, n.

152. —.—.—.]—Mere residence of a British subject in an enemy country at the outbreak of war, & his remaining there subsequently, is not sufficient to affect him with the disabilities attaching to an enemy. There must be, in addition, either a trading in the enemy country, or evidence of adhering to the enemy.

A debt due to two partners:—Held: good to support a commission of bkpcy., notwithstanding one of the partners was resident in an enemy country, such residence not being shown to be an adherence to the enemy.—ROBERTS v. HARDY (1815), 3 M. & S. 533; 2 Rose, 457; 105 E. R. 710.

153. —.—.—.]—In time of war a person is considered as belonging to that country where he is resident & carries on his trade.

A Russian vessel sailed from Cadiz on Feb. 27 bound to Abo with a cargo of salt, olive oil, etc. On Mar. 2 the shipper, a British subject, resident at Cadiz, made an affidavit before the British consul that the olive oil was his property. The vessel was captured on Apr. 15. A claim was made on behalf of the shipper for this olive oil. Further proof allowed.—THE ABO (1854), 1 Ecc. & Ad. 347; Spinks, 42; 24 L. T. O. 154. —.—.—.]—At common law the question whether a man is to be treated as an alien enemy for the purpose of his contracts, rights of suit, & the like, does not depend upon his nationality, or even upon his true domicile, but upon whether he carries on business in England or not; if he does, it is not illegal, even during war, to have business dealings with him in England in respect of the business which he carries on there. The same thing is true of a co. which has a head office in an enemy country, but a branch office in England, in respect of business transactions with such branch office.—*INGLE (W. L.), LTD. v. 156. Not necessarily his own business.—Pltf. had been employed by defts. as manager of their business in German South-West Africa before the European War, & when it broke out he was interned by the Germans, & he was kept in internment until the territory was conquered by the British. In an action by pltf. to recover from defts. his salary for the period of his internment:—Held: pltf. during his residence in an enemy State was in law an alien enemy, & he could not recover.

Any one who voluntarily resides in a hostile State, or who carries on business in a hostile State, is an alien enemy with regard to the State whose subject he was when war broke out. There is no authority to show that a man must be carrying on his own business & not that of another. If the residence is for carrying on business, that is enough (DARLING, J.).—SCOTLAND v. SOUTH AFRICAN TERRITORIES, LTD. (1917), 33 T. L. R. 255.

SUB-SECT. 2.—ENEMY SUBJECTS.

157. Subject of enemy country treated as subject of Crown.—A person may be treated as a subject of the Crown, although he is in fact the subject of an enemy State.—*PORTER v. 158. Taking oath of allegiance to neutral—Obtaining burgher's certificate.—Change of nationality of a man is established in the Prize Cts. of belligerent nations, if he has abandoned his previous national character & taken up his abode with the intention of remaining in the country of which he claims to be a subject. But an enemy does not lose his enemy character by merely taking the oath of allegiance to a neutral sovereign, & obtaining a burgher's certificate.—THE JOHANN CHRISTOPH (1854), 2 Ecc. & Ad. 2; Spinks, 60; 24 L. 159. Mere formalities under neutral law—No real change of national character.—A vessel captured on a voyage from Cronstadt to Leith carried at the time the Danish flag, but it was admitted that a short time previously she sailed under the Russian flag & was the property of a Russian merchant. She had in the meantime been sold by the master under a power of attorney from the owner to a merchant residing at Messina, alleged to be a Danish subject:—Held: (1) the new owner as a merchant resident at Messina was not entitled to a Danish character, & as a trader he was a subject of the King of the Two Sicilies; (2) he having re-sold the vessel to the master, a Prussian by birth & a Russian by national character, who within the space of two or three days became transformed into a Danish subject, the latter could not claim restitution of the vessel; (3) by the law of nations it was not competent to any State by its own particular regulations at once to change a national character to the detriment of other States; (4) there had been no change of residence, nothing to alter the national character, except some formal documents which, according to the promulgation of the law of Denmark by its constituted authorities, would be ineffectual to confer a national character upon the ship & consequently upon the master.—THE SOGLASIE (1854), 2 Ecc. & Ad. 101; Spinks, 104; 1 Jur. N. S. 47.

160. Residing in England—Subsequent admission as burgher of neutral country.—A's son, B., was born at Libau, but went to England & carried on business there. He wound up his affairs in England, & took a country house at Altona, where he was admitted a burgher, & resided at Hamburg:—Held: (1) until B. acquired another mercantile national character he had, being resident at Libau, inherited that of his father, & remained a Russian until he came to England; (2) the residence at Hamburg was equivalent to a residence at Altona, & though while in England B. was British, he had acquired a Danish character.—THE BALTICA (1855), Spinks, 264; 1 Jur. — Formal discharge from enemy nationality—No naturalisation—Habeas corpus.—Applt. was born in Germany in 1883, & in 1898 went to South America. After two or three years he came to England, & resided there till the outbreak of war with Germany. Owing to the war, he was interned as an alien enemy, whereupon he moved for a writ of habeas corpus on the ground that he was not an alien enemy & had no nationality. By North German Nationality Law of 1870, as extended by a stat. of 1873 to the whole German Empire, Germans who remained abroad for an uninterrupted period of ten years thereby lost their nationality. By a German military stat. of 1874, Germans, who had lost their nationality & had not acquired any other, were bound on returning to Germany, in order to take up permanent residence there, to present themselves for military service, provided they were not bound to serve in time of peace after the completion of their thirty-first year, & by a stat. of 1913 a person who had lost his nationality might recover it:—Held: (1) applt. had not so completely lost his nationality that he could be treated for the purposes of the application as having ceased to be a German citizen; (2) the application failed. Qu. whether the cts. will recognise a person as having no nationality.—Ex p. WEBER, [1916] A. C. 421; 85 L. J. K. B. 944; 114 L. T. 214; 80 J. P. 249; 32 T. L. R. 312; 60 Sol. Jo. 306; 25 Cox, C. C. 258, H. L.

ness there till the outbreak of war with Germany in 1914. In 1890 he obtained a formal discharge from German nationality, but he never became naturalised as a British subject. After the outbreak of war he was interned as an alien enemy. By German Imperial & State Nationality Law of 1913, s. 13, a former German could recover full German nationality without going back to Germany. On an application for a writ of habeas corpus:—Held: (1) applt. had not become entirely divested of the rights belonging to a natural-born German, notwithstanding his formal discharge from German nationality; (2) he was an alien enemy & not entitled to a writ of habeas corpus.—R. v. VINE STREET POLICE STATION SUPERINTENDENT, Ex p. LIEBMANN, [1916] 1 K. B. 268; 85 L. J. K. B. 210; 113 L. T. 971; 80 J. P. 49; 32 T. L. R. 3; 25 Cox, C. C. 179.

163. — Not naturalised—Departure for enemy country—Arrival presumed.]—Deft., a German by birth, but for many years resident in England, although never naturalised, obtained a Govt. permit from the police to travel to Tilbury in order to embark for Germany, & started on May 26. On June 2, 1915, his leasehold premises were sold under a power of attorney to pltf. by public auction. There was no evidence as to the date when deft. reached Germany, but it was some time between May 26 & June 11, 1915. In an action for a declaration that the agreement for sale had been dissolved by the act of deft. in becoming an alien enemy, the trial judge held pltf. had failed to prove that at the date of the sale deft. was an alien enemy, & the action failed:—Held: the proper inference to be drawn from the facts was that at the date of the sale deft. had arrived & was resident in Germany & was an alien enemy, but in the circumstances pltf. was not entitled to have the agreement rescinded.—TINGLEY v. MÜLLER, [1917] 2 Ch. 144; 86 L. J. Ch. 625; 116 L. T. 482; 33 T. L. R. 369; 61 Sol. Jo. 478, C. A.

164. Residing in neutral country—Trading personally in enemy colony.]—A native Frenchman, an asserted American subject, but personally present in a French colony, shipped goods for France, being described in the evidence as a French merchant:—Held: he had returned to his native character of a French merchant.—LA VIRGINIE (1804), 5 Ch. 165. Residing & trading in neutral country—Removal to another neutral country.]—Two consignments of copper belonging to H., a German subject carrying on trade in Chile, were shipped from that country to Liverpool & were seized as prize. H. had left Chile before the seizure, & he appeared to have been in Switzerland not long after it:—Held: although the country to which H. appeared to have betaken himself was, equally with Chile, a neutral country, yet he had, by leaving Chile, lost the neutral trade domicile which he had acquired by residence there, & he had thereby re-vested himself with his original character as an enemy, & the goods were liable to condemnation.—THE FLAMENCO, THE ORDUNA (1915), 32 T. L. R. 53; 60 Sol. Jo. 107.

166. Residing in neutral or allied country—

Trading through partners in latter country.]—An action can be maintained by a person of enemy nationality, who is neither residing nor carrying on business in an enemy country, but is residing either in an allied or a neutral country & is carrying on business through his partners in that allied country.—*Re SUTHERLAND (DUCHESS), BECHOFF, DAVID & Co. v. 167. Trading in neutral country—Residence there essential to acquire national character.]—After the outbreak of war with Germany certain goods belonging to a partnership firm at Buenos Aires, & shipped before the war on a British ship, were seized as prize. All the partners of the firm were Germans resident at Antwerp, who had been expelled from Belgium as enemy subjects shortly after the outbreak of war:—Held: although a subject of a belligerent State could acquire a commercial domicile in a neutral State which would protect his goods captured at sea from condemnation, residence in the neutral State was an essential condition of such domicile, & as none of the enemy partners of the firm were resident in the Argentine Republic at the time of seizure, the goods must be regarded as enemy property & subject to condemnation.—THE HYPATIA, [1917] P. 36; 86 L. J. P. 44; 116 L. T. 25.

168. — Firm registered as enemy firm at enemy consulate.]—A firm consisting of two British & two German subjects, carrying on business at Shanghai, was registered at the German Consulate as a German firm in accordance with the regulations whereby the European communities, to which China had granted extraterritorial privileges, were governed by the laws of their respective countries. The two British partners, who resided in Shanghai, were also registered as British subjects at the British Consulate. Neither of the German partners resided at Shanghai. Goods belonging to the firm having been seized as prize, they were claimed as being the property of the firm as neutrals, & alternatively as the individual property of the partners as neutral & British subjects:—Held: (1) the firm could not be treated as a neutral house of trade, & for all purposes of prize it must be regarded as a German firm carrying on business in a German colony; (2) in the circumstances, none of the partners had acquired, or could acquire, a neutral commercial domicile, & the shares in the proceeds of the goods attributable to the German partners must be condemned.—THE EUMAEUS (1915), 85 L. 169. Residing in enemy country—Trading in British or neutral territory.]—The fact that an enemy subject resident in an enemy country, has a house of trade in a neutral country, or in British territory, will not enable him to avoid the disability of being disentitled in the Prize Ct. to succeed in a claim with respect to goods seized as prize. Although a person carrying on business in an enemy country has his commercial domicile there, the converse of the rule does not extend to the case of a merchant residing in a hostile country & having his house of trade in a neutral country.—THE CLAN GRANT (PART CARGO EX) (1915), 31 T. L. R. 321; 59 Sol. Jo. 430.

170. Dying in own country—Country subsequently becoming enemy country—No proof that death not before war.]—Action on the case by an exor. for work done by testator. Testator & exor. were father & son & were French. At the time of action there was war with France. It not being shown that testator did not die before the war:—Held: (1) he was to be treated as an alien friend & could have an exor.; (2) the exor., though an alien enemy, could sue, the action being en autre droit.—VILLA v. DIMOCK (1894), Skin. 370; 90 E. R. 164.

171. Serving on enemy ship—Involuntarily—Becoming prisoner of war—Habeas corpus.—A subject of a neutral Power was forced against his will to serve on an enemy ship. The ship was captured & he was detained as a prisoner of war:—Held: he was not entitled to a writ of habeas corpus.—R. v. SCHIEVER (1759), 2 Burr. 765; 97 E. R. 551.

172. — Captured & thereafter serving on British ship—Action for wages.—When Holland was a belligerent & Germany a neutral country as regarded Great Britain, S., who was German-born, but was serving as a sailor in the Dutch fleet, was taken prisoner by the British & sent to St. Helena as prisoner of war. There he was put on board a British merchantman, then in great want of hands, & served as one of the crew on the voyage to London. On arrival he was placed in custody as prisoner of war, & while in custody brought an action for wages, & was met by the plea of an alien enemy:—Held: (1) although neutral, he had made himself an alien enemy by engaging in hostilities with Great Britain; (2) this state of enmity was not permanent for the whole period of the war, as with an alien enemy born, but ceased when by capture his service to the enemy came to an end; (3) though a prisoner of war, he was under the King's protection & entitled to sue.—SPARENBURGH v. BANNATYNE (1797), 1 Bos. & P. 163; 126 E. R. 837.

173. In enemy trade.—During war between Great Britain & Holland, a merchant ship was taken on a voyage from Narva to Dort in Holland. The course of trade was from a Dutch port & back again to Holland; the crew whether Dutch or not were all picked up in a Dutch port; the master was by birth a Dane, with a wife & family resident in a neutral country, but his own personal occupation had always been in Dutch trade. Under the general rule that mariners were to be characterised by the country in whose service they were employed:—Held: (1) the master was a Dutchman; (2) the ship should be condemned as Dutch property.—THE ENDRAUGHT (1798), 1 Ch. Rob. 22.

174. Enjoying special trading privileges—Granted by enemy.—In general a neutral merchant trading in the ordinary manner, to the country of a belligerent, does not contract the character of a person, domiciled there, by the mere residence of a stationed agent, because the effect of such residence is counteracted by the nature of the trade, & the neutral character of the merchant himself. But where the principal is not trading on the ordinary footing of a foreign merchant, but as a privileged trader of the enemy, the nature of his trade does not protect him. On the contrary, the trade itself is the privileged trade of the enemy, putting him on the same footing as their own subjects, & even above it.

In 1799, during a war in which both Holland & Spain were enemies of Great Britain, a contract was made between A., an American merchant with a trade domicil at Curacao (Dutch), & the Govt. of the Caracas (then Spanish) for the purchase of all the Spanish Govt. tobacco, payment to be made in flour, & other dry goods & specie. In Oct., 1801, a Danish ship carrying goods from Hamburg to the Caracas under this contract was captured by the British. A claim was given for the cargo on behalf of B. of Hamburg. Prior to the claim Curacao had been ceded to Great Britain, & A. thereby became, for trading purposes, British, & the further carrying out of his contract was illegal. The shipment by B. was made under a transfer to him of part of the contract:—Held: since the contract gave A. a special privilege as regards Spanish trade, it clothed him with the character of a Spanish merchant, & B., in accepting the contract & participating in the transaction, became clothed with the like character, & the cargo must be condemned.—THE ANNA CATHARINA (1802), 4 Ch. Rob. 107.

175. With house of trade in enemy & neutral countries—Transactions severable.—A., a native of Germany, had carried on business in partnership at Ostend, but in 1794, on the French taking Ostend, he dissolved the partnership, & went to reside at Blankanese. He commenced business in Altona & Hamburg, which were neutral. There was no connection between the businesses at Ostend & Hamburg:—Held: a man having a house of trade in the enemy country, as well as in a neutral country, was not to be considered in all his transactions as an enemy merchant, but the consequences of a transaction concerning his house in the enemy country must be limited to that transaction & his other trade exonerated.—THE PORTLAND (1800), 3 Ch. Rob. 41.

176. Residing & trading in own country—While in enemy occupation.—Though a State may be in the military possession of one or two belligerents, that will not constitute her subjects enemies to the other belligerent, if the Sovereign Power of the latter chuses to permit a continuance of commerce with them.

Where an insurance was effected on property, shipped in England on account of persons domiciled at Hamburg, at a time when that country was in possession of French troops, the Senate continuing to exercise the powers of civil govt. in the same manner as before:—Held: the assured entitled to recover for a loss which happened in the course of a voyage permitted by His Majesty's Ords. in Council.—*HAGEDORN v. 182. — Company with branch in enemy country.]

—Applts., a co. registered in the United States & having its head office there, had branches at Hamburg & in Japan. In pursuance of instructions from the Japanese branch the Hamburg branch bought for them aniline dyes from named German manufacturers, & shortly before the outbreak of the European war shipped the goods to Japan in a German ship. The Hamburg branch paid for the goods with the proceeds of a draft upon the Japanese branch, the draft being negotiated with bankers upon the security of the bills of lading. They invoiced the goods at cost price, the profits upon the transaction being divisible between the branches according to arrangements made by the applts. The ship & goods were captured at sea:—Held: the goods were not so connected with the Hamburg branch of applts.' business as to render them liable to condemnation as enemy property.—THE LUTZOW, [1918] A. He continued in France from Feb. till July, & having succeeded in recovering some part of his money, which he had no opportunity of remitting directly, he invested it in the purchase of several prize vessels, which he sent to England, some in ballast, others loaded with provisions:—Held: such a transaction conducted bonâ fide with that view, & directed only to removal of property which accidents of war might have lodged in the belligerent country, was entitled to be treated with some indulgence.

In the following year he went again to France to collect outstanding debts. Part of the money he received was invested in a speculation of sending a cargo of butter to Lisbon, because that port afforded a favourable market:—Held: this was a voluntary mercantile speculation in the enemy's trade, & was not the case of a man withdrawing his property to England, but engaging in new speculations, & standing on the same footing as any other merchant in the enemy's country.—THE DREE GEBROEDERS (1802), 4 Ch. It was not disputed at the trial that the sum claimed was owing by debts., but the ct. judge decided that owing to the composition of pltf. co. it was not entitled, during the continuance of a state of war between England & Germany, to sue in respect of the debt:—Held: when once the co. was registered according to English law, it became resident in England, & was entitled to judgment for the sum claimed.—AMORDUCT MANUFACTURING CO. v. properly authorised & resident in the United Kingdom or in the neutral country, is prima facie to be regarded as a friend, but may, through its agents, or persons in de facto control of its affairs, assume an enemy character. (4) A co. registered in the United Kingdom, but carrying on business in an enemy country, is to be regarded as an enemy. (5) A co. is not precluded from trading merely because alien enemy shareholders may after the war become entitled to their proper share of the profits (LORDS PARKER OF WADDINGTON, MERSEY, KINNEAR, & SUMNER).

A co. was incorporated in England with a capital of £25,000 in £1 shares for the purpose of selling in England tyres made in Germany by a German co., which held the bulk of the shares in the English co. The holders of the remaining shares (save one) & all the directors were Germans resident in Germany. The one share was registered in the name of the secretary, who was born in Germany, but resided in England & was a naturalised British subject. After the outbreak of the European war an action was begun in the name of the English co. by specially indorsed writ, issued by the co.'s solrs. on the instructions of the secretary, for payment of a trade debt. In answer to a summons for judgment under R. S. C., Ord. 14, defts. alleged (1) the co. was an alien enemy co., & payment of the debt would be a trading with the enemy: (2) the action was commenced without the co.'s authority. The master gave leave to the co. to sign final judgment, & his order was affirmed by the judge in chambers & by the C. A.:—Held: (1) the action was commenced without authority & ought to be struck out as irregular; (2) leave to defend the action ought to have been granted, as the circumstances required investigation in reference to the control & management of the co.; (3) the co. was in substance a hostile partnership incapable of suing, & any payment to it would be illegal as a trading with the enemy (EARL OF HALSBURY).—DAIMLER CO., LTD. v. 197. — Doing business in enemy country through resident agent there.]—In 1910 a co. was incorporated in England to acquire from the debtor, a German subject resident in England, a rubber estate in a German colony. The estate was transferred to, & registered in the colony in the names of, trustees for the co., & the debtor was appointed the commercial agent of the co. in the colony. The registered offices of the co. were in London. All the directors & the secretary were English, as also were the majority of the shareholders, but a considerable number of shares were held by Germans. In 1911 the co. dismissed the debtor on the ground of alleged defalcation. He then commenced an action in the High Ct. in Berlin against the co. & the trustees to recover possession of the estate. This action was dismissed with costs, which were fixed at a sum which was equivalent to £398 in English money. In 1913 the co. sued the debtor in the K. B. Div. to recover that amount. This action was pending in Aug., 1914, when war was declared between Great Britain & Germany, & the debtor was interned in England as an alien enemy & was subsequently adjudicated a bkpt. The co. claimed to prove in his bkpey. for £398. The proof was disallowed on the ground that the co. was carrying on business in an enemy country & must, therefore, be regarded as an alien enemy:—Held: (1) the mere fact that a British co. did business in an enemy country through a properly appointed agent there did not constitute it an enemy co.; (2) the co. was not an alien enemy, & was entitled to prove.—*Re HILCKES, Ex p. 198. Registered in allied country in enemy occupation.]—Pltf. co. was incorporated under the laws of Belgium & had its registered office at Antwerp. After the outbreak of war between Great Britain & her Allies (including Belgium) & Germany, a large portion of Belgium, including Antwerp, being in the effective military occupation of Germany, the co.'s business at Antwerp was closed & the books removed to London, where the business was wholly carried on, but the chairman of the co. was still in Antwerp:—Held: the co. being incorporated not in Antwerp, but in Belgium, was not incorporated in an enemy country, for although a large portion of that country was in the effective military occupation of an enemy, yet the country as a whole was not territory in hostile occupation.—SOCIÉTÉ ANONYME BELGE DES MINES D'AJUSTREL (PORTUGAL) v. 206 i. Right of seizure—In modern times—Unusual but competent.]—On the occupation of a town in the Transvaal by the British forces during the South African War, deft., a British subject, was granted the use of a house & furniture belonging to pltf., a burgher of the late Republic. Thereafter deft. was allowed to remove the furniture, & a district comr. told him that he could keep the furniture, as it had been confiscated:—Held: the furniture not having been confiscated for military purposes, nor having been taken as booty during hostile operations, & there being no proof that the British authorities had departed from the general rule that private property of belligerents on land was not to be confiscated, pltf. was entitled to recover.—ACHTERBERG v. GILNISTER (1903), S. C. 326.—S. AF.

206 ii. ———.]—During the occupation of Colesburg by the Republican forces, Z., a British subject, obtained a horse by barter from K., a hostile invader. PIENMAN* (1906), 23 S. C. 469; 16 C. T. R. 730.—S. AF.

206 iii. ——— Rights after annexation.]—A subject of a State, which has been conquered & annexed, has no legal claim against the conquering State for goods requisitioned by such State from him during hostilities, nor can he set off the value of the goods so requisitioned against a debt due by him to the conquering State.—SUPREME COURT (MASTER) v. ROTH (1905), S. C. —S. AF.

a. Resident under licence—Rights preserved during good behaviour.]—Held: (1) the Proclamation of Aug. 15, 1914, assuring Germans & Austro-Hungarians residing in Canada the enjoyment of all the rights, which the law conferred upon them in the past, during good behaviour, was in conformity with the Hague Conference, 1907, art. 23b; (2) Germans & Austro-Hungarians living in Canada during the European war preserved their civil rights.—Re HERZFELD (1914), Q. R. 46 S. C. 281.—CAN.

b. Right to acquire real or personal property.]—Testator by his will gave his real & personal estate to trustees on trust that his daughter should take the whole beneficial interest therein.

The daughter, who was born in Victoria & had always lived there, after the outbreak of war with Germany married an unnaturalised German resident in Victoria. By a condition indorsed on the probate of the will, the exors. were, in effect, forbidden, during the war, to distribute or pay any portion of the assets of the estate to any beneficiary who was a "German subject," without the express sanction of the Crown:—Held: (1) the daughter was entitled to both the real & personal estate of testator, subject to the right of the Crown to intervene; (2) she was a "German subject" within the conditions indorsed on the probate, & no payment out of the estate should be made to her without the sanction of the Crown.—*Re DOIG, CARTER v. c. Right to acquire land by devise or purchase.]—Testatrix devised land to a German, who had resided in New Zealand for nearly fifty years, & she made him exor. of the will. Germany being at war with Great Britain, probate was refused to him as an alien enemy, administration with the will annexed was granted to the Public Trustee, & the Crown claimed the land:—Held: the devisee, being an alien enemy, could not hold the land devised to him, & the Crown entitled to intervene & claim the land.

Though an alien enemy at common law has no rights at all, a resident alien enemy of good behaviour has by custom the same rights to take lands by purchase or devise as an alien friend has at common law (SIM & STRINGER, J.J.).—PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. HEIDEMANN & A.-G. (1917), N. Z. L. R. 633.—N.Z.

special treaties, & subsequently by the mitigation of rules considered to operate harshly on enemy owners of private properties, capture of such properties on land has been avoided & has fallen into desuetude. But it ought to be borne in mind—what, indeed, is often forgotten—that a potent factor, & a beneficent object, in the mitigation of the severity of seizure on land was the desirability of saving from confiscation the property of citizens of an enemy State which was already in the belligerent country at the outbreak of war. A beginning was made by exempting moneys lent by individuals of an enemy State to a belligerent State. Then real & immovable property was made an exception, at first from absolute confiscation, & later from sequestration of its income. Then came treaties allowing time for the withdrawal of mercantile property from a belligerent country at the outbreak of war (EVANS, PRES.).—THE ROUMANIAN, [1915] P. 26; 84 L. J. P. 65; 112 L. Patent in name of alien enemy—Onus of proof of British partner's interest therein—Powers of Board of Trade—Patents, Designs & Trade Marks (Temporary Rules) Act, 1914 (c. 27).—On the hearing of an application by an English co. to a committee of the Board of Trade under the above Act to avoid or suspend two patents granted to a German subject resident in Germany, A. B., a British subject, appeared & put in a statutory declaration that he & the patentee & a third party, a German subject resident in Great Britain, were jointly entitled to the benefit of the patents by virtue of a partnership agreement & the transactions consequent thereon, but he declined to give evidence of the contents of the agreement. No evidence contrary to the statutory declaration was put forward, & A. B. contended that in these circumstances the committee were bound to accept his statement & that they had no jurisdiction to deal with the patents. The committee held that there was no evidence that A. B. had any beneficial interest in the patents & proceeded to adjudicate upon the matter. A. B. then obtained a rule nisi for a prohibition to the Board:—Held: as his claim rested on the partnership agreement, which could not be proved without giving evidence of its contents, & as no evidence of its contents had been given, the committee had jurisdiction to adjudicate, & the rule must be discharged.—R. v. 214. Representation of deceased alien enemy's interest in administration action—R. S. RAPHAEL (1916), 61 Sol. Jo. 99.

215. Licensed to trade for limited purposes—Banking transactions.—For some years before July, 1914, arrangements were in force between pltf., who were bankers incorporated in the German Empire & having their head office in Berlin & a branch office in London, & the B. bank at Rio de Janeiro, under which bills drawn by the B. bank or their customers were accepted by pltf., payable in London. In the majority of the transactions between the B. bank & pltf., bills were dealt with in London, but in some cases the bills were negotiated in Berlin. In order to put pltf. in funds to meet bills so accepted which were running at the outbreak of the European war, the B. bank made remittances to pltf., including a bill (which was drawn in a set of three), payable to the order of the B. bank ninety days after sight upon defts., who were merchants in London, & bought by the B.

bank. On July 13 the B. bank sent the first of exchange unendorsed & marked "for acceptance only" to pltfs. in London to obtain acceptance, & the second of exchange duly endorsed to pltfs. in Berlin, who received it on Aug. 8, & on July 16 the third of exchange duly endorsed to pltfs. in London, who did not receive it until after the outbreak of the war. On July 31 defts. accepted the first of exchange payable in London. On Sept. 19 the Home Secretary, acting under Aliens Restriction (No. 2) Order, 1914, which was made in pursuance of Aliens Restriction Act, 1914 (c. 12), granted to pltfs. & two other German banks a licence to carry on banking business in the United Kingdom subject as follows: "(1) The permission shall extend only to the completion of the transactions of a banking character entered into before Aug. 5, 1914, so far as those transactions would, in ordinary course, have been carried out through or with the London establishments. The permission does not extend to any operations for the purposes of making available assets which would ordinarily be collected by, or of discharging liabilities which would ordinarily be discharged by, establishments of the banks other than the London establishments. No new transactions of any kind, save such as may be necessary or desirable for the purpose of the completion of the first-mentioned transactions, shall be entered into by or on behalf of the London establishments of the banks. (2) The business to be transacted under this permission shall be limited to such operations as may be necessary for making the realisable assets of the banks available for meeting their liabilities, & for discharging their liabilities as far as may be practicable." On Oct. 31, 1914, the first & third of exchange were, with the approval of the official controller appointed by the Treasury, presented to defts. for payment & were dishonoured. On Jan. 8, 1915, pltfs. in Berlin sent the second of exchange to pltfs. in London with instructions to credit the proceeds of collection to the Berlin office. Pltfs. in London had obtained advances from the Bank of England to enable them to pay the bills which they accepted for the B. bank, & were under obligation to collect from their clients all the funds due to them as soon as possible & apply those funds to the repayment of the Bank of England's advances with interest. Pltfs. brought an action on the bill against defts., who pleaded that pltfs. were alien enemies, & that the licence did not authorise pltfs. in London to present & receive payment of the bill:—Held: (1) the transactions permitted by the licence were not limited to transactions with the London establishment, but included all transactions made with pltfs., whether made or negotiated in London or in Berlin; (2) the transaction of the bill was a banking transaction & would in ordinary course have been carried out in London, & presentation for payment & collection were carrying out the transaction & were not a new transaction; (3) pltfs. were entitled to recover.—*DIRECTION DER DISCONTO GESELLSCHAFT v. The Board of Trade petitioned the ct. to appoint a controller of the business of the co. during continuance of the war:—Held: (1) such an application might be made by originating motion; (2) the controller might be appointed on evidence that the information of the Board of Trade had reasonable foundation; (3) the controller must give the security required to be given by a receiver; (4) the ct. would reserve to itself power to require the controller to render & vouch his own accounts, but would not direct him, as a matter of course, so to do.—Re MEISTER LUCIUS & BRUNING, LTD. (1914), 31 T. At the outbreak of the European war the greater number of the shares in the co. were held by Bolivians. The directors of the co. had spared no efforts to utilise for the benefit of the Allied Powers the mineral products of the co.'s mines & works. In order to escape the increasing burden of the British income tax the foreign shareholders resident abroad had become desirous that the business of the co. should be transferred to some other country. The directors accordingly issued a circular to the shareholders, stating that they proposed to recommend to them that the place of business of the co. should in future be in Switzerland, & that for that purpose the undertaking should be invested in a co. incorporated in that country. At a meeting of shareholders this proposal was sanctioned, & a provisional agreement for giving effect to it had been executed by the directors. a controller ought to be made, but limiting his powers to preventing the agreement for the transfer of the business from being carried into effect:—Held: there was ample jurisdiction under the above sub-sect. in the public interest to make the order & to prevent the English co. becoming a Swiss co., whose shareholders would presumably be able to transfer their shares to alien enemies.—Re ARAMAYO FRANCKE MINES, LTD., [1917] 1 Ch. 451; 86 L. 219. Amending Act of 1916, s. 1—Enemy business with English branch—Rights of creditors.—A co. of printers & art publishers, incorporated in the German Empire & having its principal place of business in Berlin, established a branch in London, which carried on business there on its behalf for some years before the outbreak of the European war. The principal business of the London branch was to sell to English firms goods printed by the co. in Germany & to obtain orders from English firms for printing. The London business had its own capital account & made its own profit, which was the difference between the prices obtained for the goods & those at which they were invoiced by the co. in Berlin, any net profits made by the London business, after providing for payment of expenses, being accounted for to the co. in Berlin. For the purpose of the London business a banking account was opened with a bank in London, & this account was used rarely, if at all, by the Berlin house. The co. had no other business in the United Kingdom. In Apr., 1916, the London business was ordered to be wound up, & a controller was appointed:—Held: the creditors referred to but not specified in s. 1 (3) of the above Act were the creditors of the business as mentioned in s. 1 (4), & not the creditors of the co., as mentioned in s. 1 (7), & the creditors of the enemy co. who were not enemies, but whose debts did not arise out of transactions or dealings in relation to the London business, were not entitled to share pari passu with the creditors, whose debts had arisen by reason of transactions or dealings in relation to that business in the distribution of any sums or other property resulting from the realisation of any assets of that business.—*Re HEGELBERG (W.) 220. — Position of debenture-holders.—Where a co. has issued debentures which are secured by a floating charge on its undertaking & assets, & subsequently an order is made by the Board of Trade, under the above sect., to wind up the business of the co., the order enables the controller to deal with the whole of the assets of the business, notwithstanding the debenture-holders' charge & the appointment of a receiver & manager in their action.

On an application for the appointment of a receiver & manager in a debenture-holders' action the ct. ought to be informed whether any proceedings before the Board of Trade for the winding up of the business of the co. under the above sect. are pending or threatened, & any order made will be at the risk of the parties to it, if it is obtained without such information having been supplied.—*Re KASTNER & CO., AUTO-PIANO CO. v. 221. Assets of business—Power to make calls.—The words "assets of the business" in s. 1 (3) of the above Act do not include a co.'s uncalled capital.

A controller appointed by the Board of Trade under the above Act, to conduct the winding up of a co.'s business in the United Kingdom directed by the Board to be wound up under that Act, cannot be invested by the Board with the power to make a call upon the shareholders of the co. for the purpose of putting himself in funds to discharge the debts of the business & the costs, charges, & expenses of & incidental to its winding up.—*Re GOLDSCHMIDT (JUL.) 222. Distribution of assets among shareholders.—Where under the above Act the Board of Trade orders the winding-up of a co.'s business & appoints a controller, & the co. is not in liquidation, the controller cannot be empowered by the Board to distribute assets in his hands, so far as they are not required for payment of the debts of the business & the costs of the winding-up, among the shareholders of the co.—*Re MEYERS (FR.) 223. — Business ordered to be wound up—Power to sue.—Where under the above sect. the Board of Trade makes an order requiring that the business carried on in the United Kingdom by a firm of enemy nationality shall be wound up, & appointing a controller, the Board may by that order confer on the controller power to sue in the name & on behalf of the firm for debts which became due before the outbreak of the war, without being liable to be met by the defence that pl'tfs. are an enemy firm.—CONTINHO CARO & CO. v. VERMONT & CO., [1917] 2 K. B. 587; 86 L. J. K. B. 1532; 116 L. T. 686; 33 T. L. R. 461.

224. — Distinction between winding up & bankruptcy—Liability for rent.—Where a business is wound up under the above Act, & a lease of the business premises remains unexpired when the winding up is complete, the lessor being paid all rent due to date, & the covenants having been performed, has no right against the controller or the balance of assets in his hands in respect of future rent or performance of covenants. They are not present debts or liabilities within s. 1 (3), for which alone the controller is responsible. There is no analogy in this connection between the winding up of the business of a person or co. under the above Act & the bkpcy. of an individual or the liquidation of a co., as the winding up of a business under the Act effects no change in the liability of the lessee under the covenants of the lease. If a lease is beneficial, it is a controller's duty to realise it. If it is onerous, it may be his duty to realise it. If realisation is impossible, it is ordinarily proper for him to offer the lessor fair terms (which, normally, will not exceed bkpcy. terms) for surrender of the lease. If the lessor refuses to accept a surrender, it is, in an ordinary case, the controller's duty to leave the lessor to whatever rights & remedies he may have against the lessee under the ordinary law.—Re DIECKMANN, [1918] 1 Ch. 331; 87 L. 225. — Bills of exchange accepted by enemies—Claim against assets of business of enemy drawer.—A German firm trading in London drew bills on customers in Germany payable in Germany, which were accepted by these customers & discounted with a bank in London. On Aug. 4, 1914, the date of outbreak of war, the bills had not become due, & owing to the war, they had not yet been presented for payment. By German war legislation (i.) no person residing outside Germany, whether enemy or not, could at that time enforce in German cts. any pecuniary claim arising before July 31, 1914, but would be entitled to interest; (ii.) the date of payment of all bills of exchange drawn outside, but payable in, Germany was postponed for nine months from July 31, 1914, interest till payment being payable at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum; (iii.) by an Ordinance of Sept. 30, 1914, the maturity of all pecuniary claims of persons residing in British territories was postponed until further notice, & no interest could be claimed for the period of postponement, & the time for presenting & protesting bills of exchange held by such persons was postponed until the Ordinance had ceased to be in force, which date was to be determined by the Imperial Chancellor. The firm's business was ordered to be wound up by the Board of Trade. The bank claimed as holders of the bills they should be paid, or have provided for, out of the assets the amounts of the bills at the rate of exchange notionally current either at their respective dates of payment or on Apr. 30, 1915, with interest at 6 per cent. until payment:—Held: (1) even if the Ordinance of Sept. 30, 1914, was penal & to be disregarded in English cts., the other Ordinances were valid emergency legislation & binding on the acceptors in Germany, & payment of the bills was not yet enforceable; (2) under Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (c. 61), s. 72 (5), the holders had no right of recourse to the drawers; (3) there was no present debt or liability of the business to the bank which could be paid under s. 1 (3) of the above Act of 1916, & the claim failed.—Re FRANK & RASCHKE, [1918] 1 Ch. 470; 87 L. The firm became bkpt. One of the partners died & two of the policies became payable. The trustee in bkpcy. applied for an order under s. 4 of the above Act, vesting in the custodian the policies or the right to receive the policy moneys. He did not admit R.'s lien:—Held: (1) under the above Act the only property which could be vested in the custodian was enemy property; (2) the charge on the policies, if existing, was enemy property; (3) the trustee was not interested in it & not entitled to make the application.—Re RUBEN, [1915] 2 Ch. 313; 84 L. A vesting order should not place the custodian in the position of an assignee of a disputed debt. A debtor to an alien enemy is not a "person who holds or manages for or on behalf of an enemy any property" within s. 3 (1) of the Act & ought not, under r. 2 (4) of the Rules of 1915, to be named as resp. to an originating summons for a vesting order under the above sect., unless it is clear he admits the debt. The above Act is not primarily an Act for the benefit of creditors, but for the preservation of enemy property to be dealt with after the war.

Where application is made to vest in the custodian a debt owing to an enemy by an English debtor who has property in Germany, out of which the debt may have been satisfied, the ct. in ordering the vesting directs that payment shall not be made out of the vested property except after notice to debtor.

The accepting house afterwards paid off the bank with the agreed interest. An order having been made vesting the property of the alien enemy in the custodian under Trading with the Enemy Acts:—Held: the accepting house was entitled to charge against the alien enemy what it had actually paid to the Bank of England, but after the Bank was paid off only simple interest at 5 per cent. without any charge or commission.—Re TILMAN (1918), 34 T. The decision whether payment shall or shall not be made rests ultimately with the custodian, subject only to the proviso that before paying any debt he must satisfy himself that he retains property paid to or vested in him in respect of the enemy in question sufficient to satisfy that debt & any other claims against that enemy, of which notice verified by statutory declaration may have been served upon him.

Whatever be the ultimate destination of the funds in the hands of the custodian under the Ord. in Council hereafter to be made under s. 5 (1) of the amending Act of 1914, no payment out of enemy money should be authorised by the ct. which could not by law be justified as against the enemy himself. 244. — Power to prevent trade interference from rival.]—The English assistant manager of the London branch of an alien enemy firm was appointed receiver & manager of the branch business, on his undertaking, inter alia, to endeavour to obtain a licence from the Crown for continuance of the business. Before this licence, which was subsequently granted, was obtained, the president of a rival English trade assocn. wrote a letter describing it as an unpatriotic act to do business with the firm. On motion to commit the president for interference with the receiver:—Held: the president must give an undertaking not to circulate in future any such letters during continuance of the licence.—*Re BECHSTEIN, BERRIDGE v. There was a clause in the partnership deed making provision for what was to be done in the event of the two German partners in the business or either of them being called out to serve in the German army. The partners were in fact called out, & before the outbreak of war between England & Germany, & before such partners departed for Germany, all the Act of 1914, s. 3—Partnership—Appointment on ex parte application—One partner alien enemy.]—A partnership consisted of three partners, one a naturalised British subject, another a German subject resident in London, & the third a German subject resident in Germany. On the outbreak of war between England & Germany the partners were carrying on business in London. There was a large sum due to the partnership from customers in England & the colonies. Part had been received, but there was a difficulty in collecting the rest owing to the fact of one partner being an alien enemy:—Held: the business being an ordinary commercial business, & not within the above sect., a receiver would be appointed on an ex p. application.—ROMBACH v. ROMBACH (1914), 59 Sol. Jo. 90.

247. ——— Power of receiver to sue.]—A partnership firm consisting of three partners, of whom one was an alien enemy resident in Germany, sold goods to debtors. One of the other partners afterwards brought an action for dissolution of partnership, & the ct. appointed him receiver of the business:—Held: an action was maintainable by the receiver to recover the price of the goods sold by the partnership.—*ROMBACH BADEN CLOCK CO. v. 248. Amending Act of 1914, s. 12—Partnership—Inspector appointed—Dissolution—Date of accounting.]—Three brothers of American origin, but naturalised British subjects, traded in partnership at Frankfurt-on-Main, London, & elsewhere. Pltf. resided & carried on business in London & debtors at Frankfurt. On the outbreak of war with Germany debtors were interned in Germany. In Nov., 1914, pltf. commenced an action for dissolution of partnership as from Aug. 4, 1914, the date of the declaration of war, on the ground that debtors were alien enemies. The Board of Trade under the powers conferred on them by the above sect. appointed an inspector to supervise the business of the firm, & he employed pltf. as manager.—Held: (1) the partnership must be dissolved & the usual partnership accounts taken; (2) the ct. declined to decree a dissolution either from the date of declaration of war or from the date of the writ, as it might occasion difficulties when the accounts were taken, & directed that the accounts should not be proceeded with until three months after declaration of peace.—*KUPFER v. Debtors pleaded that pltf. were alien enemies:—Held: (1) suits for discovery were not an exception to the general rule of the disability of an alien enemy to sue, since the disability to sue is personal & takes away from the King's enemies the benefit of his cts., whether for the purpose of immediate relief or to give assistance in obtaining that relief

255. — Effect of Trading with Enemy Proclamation, 1914, No. 2, pars. 5 & 6.]—Pltfs. were a firm of cotton waste merchants, the partners being all German subjects resident & domiciled in Germany, & having their principal place of business there with branches in England & elsewhere. During June & July, 1914, they sold certain bales of cotton waste to defts., cotton waste spinners at Haslingden. The goods were delivered but not paid for. In July other bales of cotton waste were invoiced by pltfs. to defts. After the outbreak of war between Great Britain & Germany defts. refused to accept or pay for the latter goods. The above Proclamation saved transactions with every branch locally situate in British territory. In an action by pltfs. for the price of the goods accepted but not paid for, & for damages for non-acceptance of the goods refused by defts. :—Held : (1) par. 6 of the above Proclamation did not enable an alien enemy to sue in respect of obligations entered into before the war, & pltfs. were not entitled to sue.—WOLF (W.) & SONS v. 299. Branch trading under licence—Under Aliens Restriction Act, 1914 (c. 12), & Orders—Stay of execution granted.—Pl'tfs. were a firm of English solrs. carrying on business in London with a branch office in Berlin. Defts. were a banking corpn., incorporated under German law, having their head office in Berlin with an office in London. Pl'tfs. before the outbreak of war between Great Britain & Germany on Aug. 4, 1914, had a current account at defts.' office in Berlin. After the outbreak of war the Secretary of State, acting under the above Act & an Ord. in Council, granted a licence to defts. to carry on business in the United Kingdom subject to certain limitations & conditions, the effect of which was that the permission was to extend only to the completion of transactions of a banking character entered into before the war, so far as those transactions would in the ordinary course have been carried out through or with the London establishment, but not to any operations for the purpose of making available assets which would ordinarily be collected by, or of discharging liabilities which would ordinarily be discharged by, establishments of the bank other than the London establishment; that all transactions carried out under the licence were to be subject to the supervision & control of a person to be appointed by the Treasury; & that any assets of the bank which might remain undisturbed after the liabilities had been discharged should be deposited with the Bank of England to the order of the Treasury. While defts. were carrying on business under the licence pl'tfs. brought an action in England against defts. to recover the amount due on their current account at the Berlin office & obtained judgment. Pl'tfs. issued a writ of fi. fa. in execution of the judgment, & the sheriff seized certain goods & chattels belonging to defts. at the London office:—Held: it was inconsistent with the conditions of the licence, which were within the powers conferred upon the Secretary of State by the above Act & the Ord. in Council, that pl'tfs. should be allowed to take in execution of their judgment the assets of the bank which were subject to the supervision & control of the person

In consequence, a suit then depending in the Danish ct. for recovering a debt due from a Danish to a British subject was not further prosecuted, & the debt was afterwards paid by the Danish subject, at the rate specified by the ordinance, to comrs. appointed in virtue of the ordinance to receive payment, upon production of whose receipt the Danish ct. quashed the suit:—Held: no answer to an action against the Danish subject to recover same debt in the cts. of England, for the ordinance not being conformable to the usage of nations was void.—WOLFF v. In 1793, after war had broken out between England & France, deft. appeared under protest pleading alien enemy. This suspended the proceedings, but they were not revived on the return of peace. On the renewal of war, T. in 1803 claimed to continue the proceedings, stating that the bond had been transferred to him:—Held: (1) since G. was again incapacitated from suing, T. was not entitled to continue proceedings commenced in G.'s name; (2) the proper course was to dismiss the parties in the old proceedings, & institute fresh proceedings in his own name.—THE REBECCA (1804), 5 Ch. 317. — Cause of action accruing before enemy status acquired—Action brought afterwards.]—Pltf., a British subject, effected an insurance on cargo, one-sixth of which belonged to himself & five-sixths to a foreign firm. A loss covered by the policy occurred, & after the loss the foreign firm became alien enemies. Pltf., whose share of the policy moneys was brought into ct., sued the underwriter on behalf of himself & the foreign firm. Deft. pleaded the general issue. There was nothing on the record to show that the action was on behalf of alien enemies:—Held: (1) the general issue went to the contract & operated as a plea of a perpetual bar; (2) since the insurance, loss, & cause of action had arisen before the assured became alien enemies, there was only a temporary suspension of their right of suit here; (3) this temporary suspension could not be taken advantage of under a plea of a general bar, & in absence of a plea of alien enemy on the record, pltf. was entitled to recover.—*FLINDT v. ## Part IV.—Trading and Communicating with the Enemy.

Cases on Trading with the Enemy Acts, Proclamations & Orders, see Nos. 216—241, 246—248, ante, 379—400, post.

SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

330. General rules applicable to trading by British subjects & their allies with enemy.]—When war breaks out between States the following rules apply, according to international law, to trading:—(1) All commercial intercourse between citizens of the belligerents ipso facto becomes illegal, unless it is expressly allowed or licensed by the head of the State. (2) Where a belligerent State has allies, the citizens of all the allied States are under the same obligations to each of the allied States as its own subjects would be to a single belligerent State as regards commercial intercourse with the enemy. (3) Where such illegal intercourse is proved between allied citizens & the enemy, their property engaged in such intercourse, whether ship or cargo, is subject to capture by any allied belligerent, & is subject to condemnation in that belligerent's own Prize Cts. (4) When such intercourse in fact takes place, the property of the persons engaged in it is confiscable, whether they were acting honestly & with bona fides or not.

Before the outbreak of war between Great Britain & her allies & Germany & Austria, a French co. contracted to sell certain goods to a German firm. The goods were shipped from a neutral State in a neutral vessel. War broke out whilst the ship was being loaded. She afterwards sailed with the goods on board for Antwerp & Newcastle. The French co. later on directed her to Swansea, where the goods were seized & sold. At the time of seizure the property in the goods was still in the French co. :—Held : although the French co. had acted honestly & bona fide, what they had done constituted trading with the enemy, & as being citizens of a State in alliance with Great Britain the goods were confiscable in the same manner as those of a British citizen would have been in similar circumstances.—THE PANARIELLOS (1916), 85 L. J. P. 112; 114 L. T. 670; 32 T. L. R. 459; 60 Sol. Jo. 427; 13 Asp. M. L. C. 484, P. C.; affg. (1915), 84 L. J. P. 140.

331. When restrictions applied—Existence of hostilities.—So far as making trade with the enemy illegal is concerned it is sufficient that hostilities actually exist. It is immaterial whether they were commenced after a formal declaration or not. It is a misdemeanour of a very high nature to carry on commerce with enemies of the Crown & king dom, & confiscation is one of the civil consequences.—THE MARIA MAGDALENA (1779), Morr. 247.

332. — Declaration of war.—The force of a declaration of war is equal to that of an Act of Parliament prohibiting intercourse with the enemy except by licence of the Crown. As an act of State, done by virtue of the prerogative exclusively belonging to the Crown, such a declaration carries with it all the force of law (WILLES, J.).—*ESPOSITO v. 335. To whom restrictions apply—Alien enemy residing in Britain under licence—Treason.—An alien, whose sovereign is at war with England, living there under the King's protection, may be guilty of treason by holding a traitorous correspondence with his own country. Seemle : if, having a family & effects in England, he goes to his native country for a time & there adheres to the King's enemies for purposes of infidelity, he might be dealt with as a traitor.—*R. v. 335 I. To whom restrictions apply—Alien enemy creditor residing in debtor's country—Right to interest as damages suspended.—The existence of a state of war between the respective countries of debtor & creditor suspends the accrual of interest, when it would ordinarily be recoverable as damages & not as a substantive part of the debt, the reason being that a party should not be called upon to pay damages for retaining money which it was his duty to withhold. The accrual of interest is equally suspended, even when the alien enemy creditor remains in the country of debtor, until debtor has actual notice that the principal can safely be paid without the possibility of its enuring for the benefit of the enemy during the continuance of hostilities.—PANGETT v. JAMSHETJI HORMUSJI (1917), 1 L. R. 41 Bom. 390.—IND.

Where plff., a British-born subject domiciled in America, effected a policy of assurance on ship, freight, & goods, at & from Virginia to any ports in the Baltic, & the ship was captured on her way to Elsinore, in Denmark, Denmark being in amity with America, but at war with England :—Held : (1) trading with the enemy by a British subject domiciled abroad was innocent ; (2) plff. was entitled to recover.—BELL v. REID, BELL v. BULLER (1813), 1 M. & S. 726 ; 105 E. R. 270.

340. ———. Supply of contraband.]—Though a British subject resident abroad may engage generally in trade with the enemy, he cannot carry on such trade in articles of a contraband nature. 341. ———. Effect of abandoning residence there.]—A., a native of Great Britain, had settled in America, where he resided & carried on an extensive trade till 1798, when he came to Europe, to England & France, to look after his debts, & to reclaim some property captured by the French, & with an intention of carrying back with him his wife & family, who had been residing in England for the education of his children. He had disposed of his house in America, & had nothing left there but his landed estate :—Held : (1) that alone was not sufficient to constitute domicile or fix the national character of the possessor not personally resident upon it ; (2) whether A.'s character was that of a French or a British merchant, he did not stand in the character of a neutral American merchant ; (3) he was not entitled to restitution of cargo seized by Great Britain while on a trading adventure between France, with which Great Britain was then at war, & Lisbon.—THE DREE GEBROEDERS (1802), 4 Ch. 342. Neutral trading in own country—Also partner in English firm—Transaction solely in neutral capacity.]—A merchant of Emden, domiciled there & clothed with the character of British consul, was partner in a firm in London. A cargo of cheeses was sent from an enemy country at the order of the merchant given from Emden, & was consigned to the London firm. It appeared this was done for the separate account of the Emden business (Emden being in a neutral country), & the London firm had no interest in the transaction :—Held : this was to be treated as neutral business, & the goods were not liable to condemnation for trading with the enemy.—THE HERMAN (1802), 4 Ch. Rob. 228.

343. ———. Neutral trading in allied country.]—During war between Great Britain & Portugal as allies & France a cargo of cotton & sugar was captured on a voyage from Lisbon to Bordeaux, & was claimed by B., a Prussian merchant resident in Lisbon. In absence of proof that there was a Prussian factory at Lisbon, which enabled B. to retain his national character for trading purposes :—Held : he must be treated as Portuguese, & his claim, as being that of the subject of an allied State having traded with the enemy, must be rejected.—THE NAYADE (1802), 4 Ch. Rob. 251.

345. ———. Subjects of State under British protection—On whose behalf no war declared.]—The status of the Ionian Islands & their relation to Great Britain were formerly regulated by the Treaty of Paris of Nov. 5, 1815. That constituted them a free & independent State, under the exclusive protection of Great Britain. The protecting sovereign had the right of making peace or war for them, but intention to place them in a state of war must be clearly expressed, & they did not necessarily become so from Great Britain being at war. In the Crimean war Great Britain did not declare war for them against Russia :—Held : their trade with Russia was not illegal, as they were neither British subjects, allies in the war, nor enemies of Russia.—THE IONIAN SHIPS, THE LEUCADE (1855), 2 Ecc. & Ad. 212 ; Spinks, 193 ; 8 State Tr. ## SECT. 2.—WHAT CONSTITUTES TRADING OR COMMUNICATING APART FROM WAR LEGISLATION, 1914–18.

348. Act of trade essential—Intention to trade insufficient.]—A British ship was fitted out for a voyage to Africa, there to barter her cargo for slaves, & then carry them to the island of Demerara, at that time a Dutch colony. The vessel sailed on Sept. 11, 1795. A declaration of war against Holland was issued on the 16th. The vessel sailed from the coast of Africa in May, 1796, & was taken off the island of Demerara, after surrender of that island to the British forces, & carried to Martinique:—Held: (1) there must be an act of trading with the enemy as well as the intention; (2) since Demerara had ceased to be an enemy there was no such act; (3) where a country was known to be hostile, commencement of a voyage to that country might be a sufficient act of illegality, but where the voyage was undertaken without that knowledge, the subsequent event of hostility would have no such effect.—THE ABBY (1804), 5 Ch. Rob. 251.

349. Bill of exchange transactions—Drawer & acceptor British prisoner of war—Payee British prisoner of war—Consideration illegal under 45 Geo. 3, c. 72.—Pltf. & deft., being taken prisoners in Portugal, jointly solicited & obtained the liberation of themselves & the ransom of deft.'s ship, contrary to the above Act, to effect which pltf. lent money to deft., who afterwards gave him a bill for the amount:—Held: pltf. could not recover on the bill.

It would be singular, where two are equally interested in wishing & effecting a ransom, if, because it happens that one advances the money, & takes the bill of the other for the repayment, that shall be good; while if the bill were given to the captor only, it would be void (LORD MANSFIELD, C.J.).—*WEBB v. 350. — Drawer British subject in enemy country—Payee neutral in neutral country.—An action may be maintained in England by a neutral (Swiss) on a promissory note given to him by a British subject in an enemy's country (France) for goods sold there.

The contracting parties were not alien enemies, & the contract was not necessarily void, though made in an enemy's country. Pltf. might lawfully sell their goods in Paris, it did not appear that deft. purchased them for any illegal purpose (LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J.).—HOURIET v. MORRIS (1812), 3 Camp. 303.

They were accepted by deft., M.'s son, who was resident in England:—Held: (1) a contract made with an alien enemy in time of war, of such a nature that it endangered the security or was against the policy of England, was void.—*ANTOINE v. 354. Insurance transactions—Insurance of enemy ships & property.—No determination has been that insurance on enemies' ships during war is unlawful. A plea of alienage, to an action on a policy of insurance brought in the name of an English agent for his principal, an alien, such interest appearing on the record, is a good plea; & a replication to such a plea that the alien is indebted to the agent (pltf.) in more money than the value of the property insured cannot be supported; but the return of peace gets rid of the objection.—*BRANDON v. 357. — An insurance effected in Great Britain on a French ship previous to hostilities between Great Britain & France does not cover a loss by British capture.

To insure enemies' property was at common law illegal. If this be so, a contract of this kind entered into previous to hostilities must be equally unavailable in a ct. of law, since it is equally injurious to the interests of the country; for if such a contract could be supported, a foreigner might insure previous to the war against all the evils incident to war. The ground on which we decide this case is that when a British subject insures against captures, the law infers that the contract contains an exception of captures made by the Govt. of his own country, & that if he had expressly insured against British capture, such a contract would be abrogated by the law of England (LORD ALVANLEY, C.J.).—*FURTADO v. 358. Against British capture.]—A policy containing an insurance against British capture eo nomine would be illegal & void upon the face of it, as being directly & obviously repugnant to the interest of the State, having an immediate tendency to render ineffectual to the extent of the indemnity created thereby all offensive operations by sea adopted on the part of His Majesty & his subjects for the purpose of weakening the strength & diminishing the resources of the enemy. Whatever opinions may heretofore have obtained in favour of the expediency of allowing insurance to be made upon enemies' property against capture, & whatever attempts may have been made to procure any legislative declaration or provisions in support of them, neither those opinions nor any degree of weight, authority, & zeal with which they were attended, have gone the length of producing one single judicial determination in favour of the legality of such a practice (LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J.).—*KELNER v. 360. Risk underwritten & loss occurring before declaration of war.]—Where a subject of a foreign Govt. insures treasure with British underwriters against capture during its transit from the foreign State to England, & the foreign Govt. seizes the treasure during transit, & war is afterwards declared between the foreign & the British Govts., the insurance is valid, & an action may be maintained in England against the underwriters after the restoration of peace, though the seizure is made in contemplation of war, & in order to use the treasure in support of the war. The important date is the seizure before the declaration of war. Such an insurance is not against public policy, which is not a safe or trustworthy ground for legal decision.

It is not difficult to solve the question whether a contract of insurance made before the war & sought to be enforced in respect of a loss incurred before the war is illegal, either in its inception or at the date when the loss was incurred. However stated, it amounts to this—that the thing done must be in its nature an assistance to the public enemy, & if there be no public enemy, there can be no aid given to him. Trading with the King's enemies is, of course, illegal. Undertaking by contract to indemnify the King's enemies against loss inflicted by the King's forces is also illegal. Such things are manifestly unlawful, but the words "King's enemies" are a necessary feature of the last proposition. It would be to introduce a new principle into our law to hold that the probability of a war should have the same operations as war itself. It is war & war alone that makes trading illegal (EARL OF HALSBURY, C.).

The law recognises a state of peace & a state of war, but it knows nothing of an intermediate state which is neither the one thing nor the other—neither peace nor war (LORD MACNAGHTEN).

There are three rules which are established in our common law. The first is that the King's subjects cannot trade with an alien enemy, i.e., a person owing allegiance to a Govt. at war with the King, without the King's licence. The second principle is that no action can be maintained against an insurer of an enemy's goods or ships against capture by the British Govt. One of the most effectual instruments of war is the crippling of the enemy's commerce, & to permit such an insurance would be to relieve enemies from the loss they incur by the action of British arms, & would be detrimental to the interests of the insurer's own country. The principle equally applies where the insurance is made previous to the commencement of hostilities, & was legal in its inception, & whether the person claiming on the policy be a neutral or even a British subject, if the insurance be effected on behalf of an alien enemy. The third rule is that, if a loss has taken place before the commencement of hostilities, the right of action on a policy of insurance by which the goods lost were insured is suspended during the continuance of war & revives on the restoration of peace (LORD DAVEY).—JANSON v. DRIEFONTEIN CONSOLIDATED MINES, LTD., [1902] A. C. 484; 71 L. J. K. B. 857; 87 L. T. 372; 51 W. R. 142; 18 T. L. R. 796; 7 Com. Cas. 268, H. L.

361. ——— Neutral property bound to enemy port.]—It is nowhere laid down that policies on neutral property, though bound to an enemy's port, are void. Indeed I know no cases that prohibit even a subject trading with the enemy except two; one of which is a short note in 2 Roll. Abr. 173, where trading with Scotland, then in a state of general enmity with this kingdom, was held to be illegal, & the other is a note, which was given to me by Lord Hardwicke, of a reference in King William's time to all the judges, whether it were a crime at common law to carry corn to the enemy in time of war, who were of opinion that it was a misdemeanour (LORD MANSFIELD, C.J.).—GIST v. MASON (1786), 1 Term Rep. 88; 99 E. R. 987.

Annotations:—Expld.* Bell v. Jilson (1798), 1 Bos. & P. 345. When the case of Gist v. Mason came on, I more than once conversed with Lord Mansfield, being desirous to obtain his opinion on the legality of such insurances; on the legality, however, I never could get him to reason; he often said that in former times it was considered for the interest of the country to insure enemy's property, & on the persuasion of its being for the interest of the country he always discountenanced any objection on that head, but he never went beyond the ground of expedience; at present such insurances are not expedient, the state of the countries at war being such as to make them otherwise (BULLER, J.). Dbtd. The Hoop (1799), 1 Ch. Rob. 196. In Gist v. Mason Lord Mansfield is reported to have said, "By the maritime law, trading with an enemy is cause of confiscation in a subject, provided he is taken in the act; but this does not extend to a neutral vessel." What is meant by the addition, "but this does not extend to a neutral vessel," it is extremely difficult to conjecture, because no man was more perfectly apprised that the neutral bottom gives in no case any sort of protection to a cargo that is otherwise liable to confiscation, unless under the express stipulations of particular treaties; & I cannot but conclude that the words of that great person must have been received with some slight degree of misapprehension (LORD STOWELL). Reid. *Esposito v. 362. Neutral property in enemy port.]—In an action by a native of America, resident in England:—Held: (1) a policy of assurance on a ship & stores "at & from a port" in a foreign country, in the common form against arrests of princes, people, etc., extended to an embargo laid on by the Govt. of that country in the loading port, & if the embargo continued, the assured might abandon & recover as for a total loss; (2) pltf. was not under any disability to sue in an English ct. of justice, he not being an alien enemy.

As to the objection, that it will be impolitic to enforce this contract because by this means we shall be indemnifying the subjects of France, for that this must be considered equal to an insurance on enemy's property, it must be remembered that this action is brought by a neutral, not by a Frenchman. The consequences of allowing this objection would be that it would be illegal to insure the property of a neutral in a foreign port (LAWRENCE, J.).—ROTCH v. EDIE (1795), 6 Term Rep. 413; 101 E. WELBIE* (1819), 1 Chit. 49.

365. Purchase from enemy—British ship taken as prize.]—His Majesty's subjects cannot buy ships captured; it is founded in his allegiance not to aid his enemy; it is to aid the enemy to buy captured property; notwithstanding the French condemnation, a person of England cannot purchase such property, which belonged to a fellow-subject; the property, therefore, still remains in the original owner from whom it was captured (LORD ELDON).—*WOODWARD v. 365 i. Purchase from enemy—Enemy recovering property confiscated.]—During the occupation of Colesburg by the Republican forces, Z., a British subject, obtained a horse by barter from K., a hostile invader. On the re-occupation of Colesburg by the British, the military authorities seized the horse & subsequently sold it with the result that it ultimately came into the possession by purchase of P. Z. obtained possession of the animal from P. in pursuance of a contract of sale, but refused to pay the purchase price, on the ground that he was the true owner:—Held: inasmuch as traffic with enemies during time of war was illegal, Z. could not acquire ownership by virtue of the exchange with K.—VAN ZYL v. PIENAAR (1906), 23 S. C. 469; 16 C. T. R. 730.—S. AF.

During war between Great Britain & Russia a Russian ship, coming into a British port under the protection of the Ords. in Council & discharging her cargo, instead of departing forthwith, was sold to a British subject & remained in a British port. Permission for the purchase had been given by the Comrs. of Customs:—Held: purchase of the ship by a British subject was a trading with the enemy not specially permitted by the Ords. in Council, & illegal.—THE NEPTUNE (1855), Spinks, 281; 26 L. On being expelled from Spain he made application to get the surplus wines consigned to the original purpose, but without effect. Three years later his brother went to Spain in a public character to manage the concerns of British prisoners in that country; the brother, on his arrival in Spain, sent off the wines to Leghorn, but finding they had turned so pale as not to be saleable without a mixture of newer wines, some new wine was purchased & mixed with the old stock:—Held: by restoring the property, the ct. did not break in upon any one of the principles the ct. was bound to sustain, as against subjects of the Govt. trading with the enemy.—THE MADONNA DELLE GRACIE (1802), 4 Ch. Rob. 195.

A cargo of goods consigned on account by A. to B. arrived in England in Nov., 1814, & were sent by B. to France & there sold, & he received bills for the amount, which he got discounted. Another cargo, so consigned, arrived in England in Jan., 1815, & was sold by B. before Feb. 15. In Mar., 1815, B. became bkpt., & was appointed by his assignees their agent to wind up his affairs, in the course of which employment he received the proceeds of the second cargo & transmitted accounts to A., in which he admitted A. to be his creditor for a balance in respect of the proceeds of both cargoes. 372. Shipping goods to enemy—Through neutral country.—Articles were purchased in England by A. & Co. & shipped by them for Emden, with directions that they should be sent on to Amsterdam, then a blockaded port. The goods were claimed as the property of C., a merchant in America, & it was said the transaction was conducted by A. & Co. in London, as agents for C. in America:—Held: in the case of a British subject shipping goods to go to the enemy through a neutral country the penalty would be incurred, & in the circumstances, & having regard to the tenor & form of power of attorney given by C., A. & Co. were not acting as agents, but were owners of the goods.—THE JONGE PIETER (1801), 4 Ch. 373. In ship apparently neutral—Sham sale by British to neutral shipowner.—No subject of the King can trade directly with the public enemy, except under a licence authorising him so to do, & if he presumes to trade otherwise, his property so employed is liable to confiscation.

A ship purporting to be Danish was seized with a cargo destined for an enemy. The ship was alleged to have been recently sold by its English owners to the purported Danish owner. The papers were in order, but it appeared that the new Danish master was only a figurehead, & that the old English master was really in command & was in communication with the old English owners:—Held: (1) the sale was a sham; (2) the owners were the old British owners; (3) as they had been trading with an enemy, the ship & cargo must be condemned as lawful prize.—THE ODIN (1799), 1 Ch. Rob. 248.

374. — From foreign port—According to directions of enemy firm.—Despatch of goods from a foreign port after the outbreak of war, & with knowledge of it, by a British subject or the subject of an allied State, for delivery as directed by an enemy firm & for their benefit, constitutes a trading with the enemy which makes the goods liable to forfeiture: & the position is not affected by the fact that the property in the goods remains in the consignors, that they were shipped for discharge at an English port, & that the enemy buyer selected as the actual recipient a firm carrying on business in London.—THE PANARIELLOS (1916), 85 L. 372 i. Shipping goods to enemy—Through neutral country.—The M., a British ship, had, in a neutral port, taken on board some cargo consigned to another neutral port, but ultimately destined for the enemy's country. The vessel was first to call at Colonial ports, where the customs authorities, on instructions from the Secretary of State, through the High Comr., had established the practice that all cargo consigned to the enemy's country should, if so directed, be landed in the Colony. These instructions had been communicated to the agents of the M., & had been obeyed in the cases of other ships belonging to the same owners which had arrived at Colonial ports before & after the M. The M. was seized by a man-of-war immediately after her arrival at a Colonial port. The bona fides of the owners being clear, & it being established that there had been no intention to take goods beyond Colonial ports except with permission of the authorities, the vessel was decreed to be restored on payment of the captors' costs.—Re MASHONA (1900), 17 S. d. Bank holding concession from enemy State—Effect of licence to trade.—Where a bank, holding a concession from the Govt. of an enemy's country, but licensed by both the Imperial & Colonial authorities to carry on business in the Cape Colony, sues a debtor, it is no ground of defence that dealings with the bank are prohibited as constituting trading with the enemy.—*GOLDMAN v. 375. Delivering goods to British subject—Agent in Britain of enemy firm.]—S., who carried on business at Odessa, ordered goods of pltf., an earthenware manufacturer in England, to be delivered to a carrier. Defts., merchants at Liverpool, were S.'s agents. In consideration of the order being executed, they undertook to accept pltf.'s draft for the invoice price on pltf. delivering to them the carrier's receipt. In an action by pltf. he alleged that, although he had performed all the conditions precedent, defts. refused to accept his draft. Defts. pleaded that S. had become an alien enemy, & pltf. could not lawfully despatch the goods to him in execution of the order. Pltf. replied that in the declaration of war made Mar. 28, 1854, by Great Britain against Russia, Great Britain waived the right of seizing enemies' property on neutral vessels, except contraband of war, & by an Ord. in Council of Mar. 29, 1854, Russian vessels in British ports were allowed six weeks, namely, till May 10, for loading & departing, & should be permitted to make their voyages, & that the goods were delivered to the carrier long before expiration of the six weeks & might have been shipped under the Ord. in Council:—Held: pltf. was entitled to judgment, for, assuming the declaration of war would of itself have made it illegal for pltf. to send goods to an enemy, they might have been lawfully shipped within the period allowed by the Ord. in Council. Seem: even if there had been no Ord. in Council, pltf. might have lawfully shipped the goods, as the contract was legal in its inception, & nothing but an Act of Parliament could render it illegal; & the property in the goods would vest in the alien enemy subject to forfeiture to the Crown, & there would have been nothing illegal in performing it, unless in the course of the voyage pltf. dealt with the alien enemy (MARTIN, B.).—CLEMENTSON (CLEMENTSON) v. 376. Piloting neutral ship to enemy port—With goods for enemy.]—In a suit for wages on the part of a British pilot for conducting an American vessel from the Downs to Flushing:—Held: (1) no suit could be maintained on behalf of a British subject for services performed in aiding commerce & importation of the enemy; (2) this was a contribution of his skill & experience to assist & promote navigation of the enemy's ports; (3) a ct. of justice would give no support to demands arising out of a course of navigation illegal to a British subject.—THE BENJAMIN FRANKLIN (1806), 6 Ch. Rob. 350.

377. Examining witnesses in enemy country.]—In an action on a charterparty for not loading at Odessa:—Held: a commission would not be granted at the instance of defts., who were enemies, to examine witnesses at Odessa, as the grant of the commission would be sanctioning an unlawful communication with the Queen's enemies.—BARRICK (BARWICK) v. In 1915 a decree for dissolution of the marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery was made on the husband's petition, he being then interned. Subsequently resp. married co-resp., & the husband was repatriated. Resp. & petitioner having both applied for the custody of the children, an order was made in the Divorce Division that they should be sent back to Germany, subject to their father giving an undertaking that they should go to live at Geneva:—Held: the order must be discharged, it being contrary to public policy that any British subjects should be sent during war to the enemy country, & the proposed undertaking was valueless as being unenforceable.—UHLIG v. #### SUB-SECT. 1. — WHAT TRADING WITH THE ENEMY.

379. Acts not exhaustive—Common law offences still punishable.]—"Act A." & "Proc. A." are not exhaustive in the sense that anything not expressly prohibited by them must be taken as permitted. Inquiry must still be made whether acts not therein mentioned are prohibited by the common law or by stat., & by common law not only commercial intercourse but all intercourse with an alien enemy is prohibited.—ROBSON v. PREMIER OIL & PIPE LINE Co., Ltd. [1915] 2 Ch. 124; 81 L. J. Ch. 629; 113

No. 402, post, was declared to be without prejudice to the rights of either party in respect of concentrates supplied before war. In an action for payment of the balance of the price of concentrates delivered before war, it appeared that genuine quotations of the kind mentioned in the contract were still obtainable in London, although these did not represent the world's prices:—Held: the adjustment of the price of the concentrates under the contract with defts. named agent, who was still in Adelaide, did not involve a prohibited intercourse with the enemy.—ZINC CORPN., LTD. v. HIRSCH (1917), V. L. R. 289.—AUS.

380. Attempting to trade with enemy—Goods in enemy country ordered from neutral in neutral country.]—Petitioners, who carried on business in Australia as spirit merchants, had dealt very largely for a long time with an American co. carrying on business in New York & having a branch at Rotterdam. The American co. sold gin which had been made at Rotterdam, & were in the habit of sending it to Hamburg to be bottled there before being shipped to their customers. In Aug., 1914, when war broke out between Great Britain & Germany, the American co. had a considerable quantity of gin at Hamburg, & after an interval they began to withdraw it from time to time & to take it to Rotterdam, where they shipped it in execution of their contracts. Petitioners ordered gin from the American co., knowing that the latter would have to get it from Hamburg in order to ship it from Rotterdam to them in Australia:—Held: the action of petitioners was a direct breach of the Proclamation against trading with the enemy, & petitioners were properly convicted of attempting to trade with the enemy.—Moss v. Donohoe (1916), 32 T. L. R. 343, P. C.

381. Payment to English wife separated from alien husband—Resident in neutral or allied State.]—Deft. in 1903 had married C., an Austrian subject resident in Austria. No marriage settlement or agreement for one was executed on the marriage. In Oct., 1914, upon their joint petition C. & deft. obtained from the Vienna cts. a decree of separation a mensa et thoro. In Apr., 1915, deft. went to reside in Rome, & remained there with no intention of returning to Austria. In 1917 deft. became absolutely entitled to a certain sum, being part of a fund under a settlement & the will of her father, & entitled for her separate use, without power of anticipation, to the income of a sum produced by policies of insurances settled by her father. On summonses taken out by the trustees of the two settlements to ascertain whether payments could be made to deft., the questions raised were (1) whether C. had any marital rights under Austrian law, which prevented deft. from giving good receipt for the capital or interest, & (2) whether the fact that deft. was an enemy subject prevented the payments being made to her. The evidence of the Austrian law upon the subject was to the effect that, in the absence of a marriage contract modifying the rights of the spouses in respect of the wife's property, deft. could give a valid discharge, both as regarded the capital sum & the income of the same, & also for the income derived from the policy moneys, without the concurrence or authorisation of C., & that he had no claims on any property belonging to deft.:—Held: (1) deft. was not an alien enemy within Trading with the Enemy Acts, 1914 to 1916; (2) the income of the two sumssubject to the trusts of the settlements should be paid to deft. so long as she was resident in an allied or neutral country, or in the United Kingdom.—Re GRIMTHORPE, [1918] W. N. 16.

382. "Act A.," s. 1—"Proc. A.," par. 8—Inciting to trade.]—Applt., a British subject employed by an enemy firm which was indebted to an English firm, suggested to the English firm that they should buy three ships belonging to the enemy firm, mtged. by them to the English firm, which were lying idle in neutral ports owing to the European war, the mtges. to be cancelled & the English firm to pay a sum of money, which was to be remitted to a firm in Holland & paid by them to a solr. in Germany as trustee for the enemy firm. In the course of the negotiations nothing was said by applt. as to the obtaining of a licence. On a charge of soliciting & inciting the persons constituting the English firm to trade with the enemy, contrary to the provisions of the above Act:—Held: (1) the jury were entitled to come to the conclusion that the proposal was not intended to be conditional upon a licence being obtained; (2) applt. was rightly convicted of inciting to trade with the enemy.—R. v. SPENCER (1914), 84 L. J. K. B. 1457; 112 L. T. 479; 24 Cox, C. C. 588; 11 Cr. App. Rep. 30; 78 J. P. Jo. 581, C. C. A.

383. —"Proc. A.," par. 6—Voting in trading company.]—Prohibition of intercourse with alien enemies extends to all intercourse, whether commercial or not, which tends to detriment to one's own country or to advantage to the enemy. The exercise of the voting power of enemy shareholders in a British trading co. for the purpose of obtaining control, where the co. owns large property in the enemy's country, is forbidden on this principle. The exercise of such voting power is in fact a commercial transaction. Commercial intercourse is not confined to making contracts between an alien enemy & a British subject, & a transaction directed to obtaining control of a trading co. is commercial.—ROBSON v. PREMIER OIL & PIPE LINE CO., LTD., No. 379, ante.

384. —"Proc. A.," par. 5 (7)—Obtaining delivery of enemy goods—"Goods, wares & merchandise."]—Under business arrangements made between a lithographic printer in England & a firm in Germany, the printer was entitled, when war was declared between Great Britain & Germany, to be supplied by the firm without payment with a certain number of lithographic transfers. He made arrangements by which these transfers were sent to him in London & was convicted of trading with the enemy:—Held: (1) the transfers were "goods, wares & merchandise" within the above Proclamation; (2) the goods were obtained from the enemy within the Proclamation; (3) applt. was properly convicted.—R. v. OPPENHEIMER & COLBECK, [1915] 2 K. B. 755; 84 L. J. K. B. 1760; 113 L. T. 383; 79 J. P. 383; 31 T. L. R. 369; 59 Sol. Jo. 442; 25 Cox, C. C. 39; 11 Cr. App. Rep. 146, C. C. A.

385. —"Proc. A.," pars. 5, 7—Making payment extinguishing liability of enemy to neutral—"By or on account of enemy."]—The words "for the benefit of an enemy" in par. 5 of the above Proclamation were introduced for the purpose of preventing devices, tactics, & various means, by which mercantile houses might seek, but for those words, to make payments indirectly, notwithstanding there is an express prohibition of a direct payment. The words are wide & must be construed to have a wide application, & are intended to cover the making of payments to an enemy by any device or by any recourse to indirect means.

Prisoner was a partner in a firm consisting of himself & two brothers which traded at Frankfurt-on-Main in Germany, & in London. All the partners were naturalised British subjects. The prisoner resided & carried on business in London, & his two brothers resided at Frankfurt & carried on business there. Before Aug. 4, 1914 (the date on which war broke out between Great Britain & Germany), the firm became indebted to a neutral in Holland in respect of transactions which had taken place between the Frankfurt partners & the neutral. The neutral looked to the Frankfurt partners for payment, & there was no suggestion that he had threatened legal proceedings against prisoner in respect of the debt. Acting upon instructions from his Frankfurt partners, prisoner, after the date of the Proclamation, paid the amount of the debt to a firm of foreign bankers in London, with directions to them to credit the neutral through their Holland branch with the amount paid to them in London, & the foreign bankers did so credit the neutral. He also paid to the London branch of another neutral, who carried on business in Rotterdam & London, the amount of a debt owing by his Frankfurt partners to the neutral in Rotterdam:—Held: (1) as the effect of payments to the neutrals was to extinguish the obligations of the Frankfurt partners to pay the debts to the neutrals, the resources of individuals in Germany were to that extent augmented, & those of Great Britain diminished, & the payments were for the benefit of an enemy within par. 5 of the Proclamation; (2) the payments were not protected by par. 7 of the Proclamation, as they were not payments "by or on account of enemies" within that paragraph, but payments for the benefit of enemies. Qu.: whether prisoner could have been convicted, if he had made the payments under threats of legal proceedings by the neutrals.

386 i. "Act A., s. 1—"Act B., s. 10—"Proc. A., par. 5 (7)—Proposal to supply goods to enemy through neutral.—An indictment charged A. with proposing to supply goods to the enemy, by writing & posting a letter addressed to B. residing in Holland, requesting B. to write to certain firms in Germany asking "if you can deliver thro' you any goods for summer orders":—Held: (1) the indictment was relevant in respect that the letter in question might constitute a proposal to supply goods to persons resident in Germany, although made indirectly through B., who was not an agent for either party; (2) the letter having been actually posted inferred not merely "preparation" but perpetration of the offence charged.—*H. 386 ii. Proc. A., par. 5 (7) (9)—Proposing or agreeing to supply or supplying goods to enemy.—Where a person is charged with supplying, or with attempting to supply, or with proposing to supply, or with agreeing to supply, goods to the enemy, or with entering into any commercial transaction for the benefit of the enemy, it does not signify where the parties or the goods were at the time when the acts founded on were committed; nor to whom the goods belonged (for a person may supply goods to the enemy which do not belong to him at all); nor whether the person selected by the accused, as the intermediary through whom the goods were to be supplied, was the servant or agent of the accused or a total stranger, nor whether the accused received payment for the goods or made conditions subject to which he was willing to supply them & did supply them; nor how the goods, short of a licence, came to be available. It is sufficient that the accused was resident, carrying on business or being in the British Dominions, & that the goods were supplied or permitted to be supplied to the enemy, & it is not necessary to specify in the indictment a locus of the offence, provided that the transaction is particularised, e.g., by the goods being identified & the date & place of sale given.—*H. 386 iv. Proc. A.—Attempt to trade.—A person was charged on indictment with attempt to trade with the enemy in respect of a letter written by him to a merchant in Germany on Sept. 22, 1914, with regard to delivery of goods under contract entered into before war:—Held: apart from "Act B., s. 10" "attempt" to trade with the enemy was an indictable offence under "Act A." taken along with Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1887 (c. 35), s. 61.—H. M. ADVOCATE v. MITCHELL (1915), 52 Sc. L. R. 273; 1 S. L. T. 92.—SCOT.

In summing up to the jury the judge directed them that, if they found prisoner made the payments with the intention of benefiting himself, it would not quite answer the case, & they must further consider whether he made the payments knowing they would in fact benefit the enemy & in order to benefit him:—Held: without deciding that the offence might not be committed even if it was not established that the payments were made in order to benefit the enemy, the direction was right, although possibly too favourable to prisoner.

The offence of trading with the enemy is a serious offence & ought to be dealt with with proper severity, all the circumstances of the case being taken into account.—R. v. KUPFER, [1915] 2 K. k. Act of 1914 (No. 9), ss. 3, 6—"Proc. A., par. 5—Agreement to ship goods to neutral country & hold proceeds for enemy.—A., an American subject, discovered that certain cocoa at Sydney, which had been consigned by him to B., a German merchant carrying on business at Hamburg, had not been sent. The cocoa was accordingly consigned to C. & Co. at San Francisco. Def., managing director of D. Co., registered in New South Wales, assisted in consigning the cocoa, and wrote to E. & Co., D. Co.'s business correspondents in New York, informing them of what had happened so that they might advise B. as to the proceeds of the cocoa, which were intended for his account & were to be held by C. & Co. pending instructions from B.:—Held (ISAACS, HUGGINS & POWERS, JJ. diss.): there was no evidence of an attempt by A. to trade with the enemy by sending the cocoa to C. & Co., which either def. or D. to embark for Germany, & started on that day. On June 2, 1915, the leasehold premises were sold to pltf. by public auction, & a deposit was paid & an agreement signed by him. Deft. reached Germany some time between May 26 & June 11, 1915. In an action for a declaration that the agreement for sale had been dissolved by the act of deft. in becoming an alien enemy:—Held: (1) the agreement entered into by the attorney in execution of the power did not involve any intercourse with the enemy, & was not within the mischief of the common law or of the above Proclamation or of the above Acts, & was valid; (2) the sale could legally be carried out by the attorney & if necessary be completed by a vesting order under Trustee Act, 1893 (c. 53), or with the assistance of the custodian under Act C., s. 4, & pltf. was not entitled to have the agreement rescinded.—TINGLEY v. 387. — “Act B.,” s. 1 (1)—“Proc. A.,” par. 5 (1)—Making payment resulting in improvement of enemy security.]—Pltf., a naturalised British subject resident in England, sued defts. for the price of goods sold & delivered before the outbreak of war. The goods were in fact supplied to pltf. by A., who had become an alien enemy, on terms under which A. took a share of the price on such in excess of a certain minimum, but pltf. resold as principal:—Held: payment of money to a third person, which merely improved the position of an enemy, by giving him further security that he would ultimately recover the money, was not an offence within the above Proclamation & “Act A.,” where there was no intention that the enemy, while such, should benefit by it as a payment.—SCHMITZ (SCHMIDT) v. 388. — “Act B.,” s. 2—“Proc. A.,” par. 5—Payment of premiums by surety for alien enemy—Right to assignment of security.]—B., an alien, effected two policies on his own life with an insurance co., & assigned them to the co. by way of mtge. to secure a loan, & he & his sureties jointly & severally covenanted with the co. to repay the loan with interest, & also to pay the annual premiums for keeping the policies on foot. On the outbreak of war in Aug., 1914, B. became an alien enemy & left the country. Afterwards one of the sureties paid to the co. the premiums as they accrued due from time to time, which the co. accepted with the reservation that they did not warrant the validity of the policies. Subsequently the surety tendered the amount due on the mtge. & claimed an assignment of the policies which the co. refused to execute without a similar reservation:—Held: (1) the policies were not voided merely by B. becoming an alien enemy, & the payment to & receipt by the co. of the premiums from the surety did not involve illegal intercourse with an enemy; (2) the surety, on payment of what was due under the mtge., was entitled to an assignment of the policies without reservation.—SELIGMAN v. EAGLE INSURANCE CO., [1917] 1 Ch. 519; 86 L. J. Ch. 353; 116 L. T. 146.

389. “Act B.,” s. 6—English partner taking over English assets—Dissolution before war—Right to sue alone for firm debt.]—Pltf., a British subject, carried on business in Germany in partnership with S., a German subject, but outbreak of war being imminent between Great Britain & Germany, the partnership was dissolved, under an arrangement by which S. took over the German & Austrian assets & liabilities, & pltf. took over all assets & liabilities outside Germany & Austria, & was to carry on business in London. The result of the transaction was to divert a balance of £6,500 & the goodwill of the business from Germany to England. In an action on a bill of exchange given by defts., an English firm, to the German firm, & for goods sold & delivered before the war:—Held: (1) the transaction was not trading with or for the benefit of the enemy; (2) the arrangement before the war was not invalidated by the above sect.; (3) as to the claim in respect of goods sold & delivered before the war, pltf. could sue alone as equitable assignee without joining his partner, who could not be effectually served or joined, but in the circumstances he was not entitled to costs.—WILSON v. 391. “Proc. B.”—Payment of insurance loss—“Transaction.”]—Pltfs. effected a policy of marine insurance with defts., a German co., with their head office in Germany. The policy was issued on July 31, 1914, & the loss occurred at the end of Aug. or the beginning of Sept. Defts. carried on business in England through their underwriters & agents, who accepted & settled risks & issued policies for them, the policy in question being so effected. Defts. had complied with Cos. (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (c. 69), s. 274, respecting cos. established outside the United Kingdom which established a place of business within the United Kingdom. The policy contained a clause giving jurisdiction to the English cts. as fully as if the co. were incorporated in England, & authorising the service of process upon its agents there. On a summons to transfer the action to the Commercial Ct.:—Held: the payment of a loss was not a “transaction” within the above Proclamation, & an order for transfer ought to be made.—INGLE (W. their way to Australia, after the beginning of the war. Later, the agents in Sweden of the co. obtained the goods from Hamburg & sent them to Sydney, where they subsequently arrived. The co. knew the goods were to be so obtained & sent, & knew they were in transit to Australia, & took no means to prevent their shipment or their delivery:—Held: (1) the co. were properly convicted on a charge of trading with the enemy by obtaining goods from Germany; (2) the managing director of the co., who knew all the facts, but was absent from Sydney when the goods arrived there, was properly convicted on a similar charge in respect of the same transaction.—BALTIC SEPARATOR CO., LTD. & SIWERTZ v. DONOHUE (1917), 22 C. L. R. 534.—AUS.

*n. The summonses required them to answer an information preferred against them of having committed twenty-three separate offences under the above Act, but twenty-one of them were alleged to have been committed more than six months before the preferring of the information. At the hearing the justices treated the charges as indictable offences, & committed appets. for trial:—Held: the justices had jurisdiction to treat the offences as indictable offences & to commit appets. for trial.—*R. v. R. sent tobacco to accused's agents at Amsterdam about the end of Sept., 1914, & the agents again shipped them

Held: (1) it was too late to raise the objection in the Criminal Court of Appeal; (2) the consent of the A.-G. must be presumed, unless the point was taken at the trial that it had not been proved; (3) the objection was in the circumstances purely technical, & the conviction must stand.—*R. v. B.," par. 5—Application to trade with branch—Whether retrospective.]—An insurance co., registered under the law of Germany & having its head office in that country, had a branch office in London where insurance business was transacted on its behalf by the co.'s underwriters & agents. A policy of marine insurance was effected by pltfs. in July, 1914, with the co., through its branch office. A loss under the policy occurred after the outbreak of war, but before the coming into force of "Proc. B." In an action to recover the loss:—Held: (1) apart from "Proc. B." the rules applicable to trading with alien enemies did not apply to business transacted with the branch office; (2) the Proclamation had not a retrospective effect.—INGLE (W. L.), LTD. v. on Oct. 7, 1914, to L. & Co., accused's agents in London, who re-shipped them, & accused received same in Madras between Nov. 21 & 26, 1914. Accused was convicted of trading with the enemy under s. 3 of the Ordinance, on the ground that he obtained in Madras between Nov. 21 & 26, 1914, goods from an enemy & from an enemy country:—Held: (1) the conviction could not be sustained, as the charge was not proved as laid; (2) the ct. would not amend the charge into one of obtaining goods by way of transmission under par. 5 (7) of the above Proclamation.—*HOOPER v. 397. — Meaning of "branch."]—All the partners of an enemy firm were in Hamburg, & the headquarters of the firm were there. It was directed from there, & the lease of the London premises of the firm was in the firm's name, & the London business was conducted by the managers at a salary, who had no power to accept orders. These were received by them & submitted to Hamburg for sanction, & the books were kept at Hamburg. The London banking account was in the firm's name, & the balance thereof was transferred from time to time to Hamburg:—Held: the London premises were not a "branch" within the above par. (par. 6)—Re COUTINHO, CARO & Co., [1918] 2 Ch. 384; 87 L. J. Ch. 565; 118 L. T. 746; 62 Sol. Jo. 754.

398. — Extent of protection.]—After the outbreak of the European war a quantity of hides were shipped on a British vessel by the Bangkok branch of an Austrian co. consigned to the co.'s branch in Manchester. The hides were landed in Liverpool & stored in a warehouse, where they were seized as prize. It was contended that the above par. &/or certain correspondence between the manager of the Manchester branch & the Trading with the Enemy Committee constituted a licence to the Manchester & Bangkok branches of the enemy co. to trade, & that on this ground the goods were immune from confiscation:—Held: (1) the above par. afforded protection to a person acting within it from being convicted of the offence of trading with the enemy, but it had no application to the case of the transfer of goods belonging to an enemy from one branch house to another so as to affect the property in the goods, & could not be construed as taking away the right to seize enemy goods on a British ship or in a British port; (2) a licence from the Crown must be strictly construed & proved, & the Trading with the Enemy Committee neither had the authority to give a licence which would defeat the rights of captors, nor purported to give such a licence.—THE ACHILLES, [1917] P. 218; 86 L. 399. "Act D."—"Reg. A.," regs. 18 & 57—Communicating with enemy—Truth or falsity of communication immaterial.]—Applt. was indicted for unlawfully attempting to communicate in a certain letter information of a nature calculated to be directly or indirectly useful to the enemy. The indictment was framed under the above regulations & contained six counts, each of which alleged an attempt to commit an offence against reg. 18, & each of which ended by alleging that the offence was committed by applt. with the intention of assisting the enemy. The trial judge in summing up told the jury that whether the information contained in the letter was true or false was wholly immaterial; if prisoner was sending information which from its very nature he must have known would be of use to the enemy, it would not be an answer to the charge that the information sent was wrong:—Held: (1) each count in the indictment charged one offence only, & the averment as to intent was necessary to justify the judgment for the offence when it was committed in an aggravated form; (2) the question of intent was one of fact which was properly left to the jury; (3) the trial judge did not misdirect the jury, & if a person intentionally communicated information, intending to inform & not to mislead, he took the risk whether the information was true or not.—*R. v. 400. "Act E."—Employment agency—London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1910 (c. cxxix.).]—Resp., a German naturalised as a British subject in 1889, & against whose personal character & loyalty no suggestion was made, applied to the licensing authority for a licence to carry on an employment agency in the city of London, such agency having for its object the procuring of employment for naturalised subjects of German, Austrian or Hungarian birth. The licensing authority refused the application on the ground that in the circumstances of the war they would not be justified in giving facilities to such persons to obtain situations in the city of London. Resp. appealed to an alderman, sitting as the appeal tribunal under the above Act of 1910, who, after a rehearing of the application, decided that he was precluded by "Act E." from holding on the facts that applt. was an unsuitable person for the grant of a licence within s. 22 (1) of the Act of 1910, & granted the licence. On a case stated:—Held: he was not so precluded, & the case should be remitted to him for the purpose of considering whether, in the circumstances of the war, applt., being of enemy origin, was an unsuitable person to hold the licence.—*LONDON CORPN. v. Under those contracts certain events, including force majeure & causes beyond control of the parties which prevented or delayed the contract being carried out, were grounds on which the contract should be suspended:—Held: (1) the contracts were not abrogated by the war; (2) all obligations under them were suspended while it continued.—*ZINC CORPN. & ROMAINE, LTD. v. In respect of this office the co. was registered under Cos. 402 i. Sale of goods—Contract dissolved.]—In May & June, 1914, defts. agreed to purchase goods at Calcutta from A. & Co., who also carried on busi-

made in 1910, plfts., a co. incorporated in England, agreed to sell, & defts., who resided & carried on business in Germany, agreed to purchase during each of the ten years 1910 to 1919, both inclusive, the whole of plfts.' production of zinc concentrates at their mine in Australia, such production not to be less than 85,000 tons nor more than 95,000 tons in each year; & plfts. were prohibited, so long as the contract should be in force, from selling any zinc concentrates to any person other than defts., who were entitled at any time to leave 2,200 tons of concentrates on plfts.' floors & 800 tons in their vats at plfts.' expense. By clause 17 of the contract of 1908 it was provided that in the event of (inter alia) any strike, suspension of labour, floods, fire, stoppage of water supply, acts of God, force majeure, or any cause beyond the control of either the sellers or the buyers preventing or delaying the carrying out of the contract, "then this agreement shall be suspended during the continuance of any & every such disability." War was not specified as a cause of suspension. The contract contained various provisions as to notices being given, as to fixing the price of & the method & time of payment for the concentrates, as to weighing, sampling & assaying the concentrates, & as to other matters. On the outbreak of war between Great Britain & Germany on Aug. 4, 1914, defts. became alien enemies:—Held: (1) assuming that war was a cause of suspension within clause 17 of the contract of 1908, the suspension was only of deliveries of concentrates & not of the whole contract, & the effect of the prohibition against selling to any person other than defts. was to prevent plfts. from using their resources for the benefit of England; (2) the further performance of the contract after the outbreak of war became illegal as being detrimental to the interests of the country & of assistance to the King's enemies, & the contract was dissolved; (3) the continued existence of the contract would involve commercial intercourse with the enemy, & upon that ground also the agreement had become illegal & was dissolved.—*ZINC CORPN., LTD. v. In case of strikes or stoppage of their works from unforeseen causes plfts. were not bound to deliver, & during mobilisation of German military forces defts. were not bound to take delivery. Delivery was not made:—Held: the contracts were dissolved on both sides on the outbreak of war. & were not revived by an order being subsequently made, & a controller appointed, for winding up the firm's English business under Trading with the Enemy Amendment Act, 1916 (c. 105).—Re COUTINHO CARO & CO., No. 397, ante.

The contracts provided that in case of war hindering shipment or delivery the deliveries might be suspended during its continuance, shipment to be resumed as soon as practicable:—Held: the contracts were dissolved as from Aug. 4, 1914, by reason of the outbreak of war with Germany.—*NAYLOR, BENZON & CO., LTD. v. of the balance of the price of concentrates delivered before war, it appeared that deft.'s named agent was in Adelaide, & genuine quotations of the kind mentioned in the contract were still obtainable in London, although these did not represent the world's prices:—Held: (1) the outbreak of war had not revoked the authority of the agent to adjust the price of the concentrates under the contract; (2) there was no express or implied condition in the contract that, in the event of war affecting the character of the London quotation, payment of the balance of the price of concentrates delivered before war should be abrogated, or be suspended during war.—ZINC CORPN., LTD. v. HIRSCH (1917), V. L. R. 289.—AUS.

& one German. The object of the co. was to acquire certain mines & railways in Spain from the Spanish firm. The capital of the co. was subscribed by the four firms equally, & by its articles contracts were to be entered into by the co. with each of the four firms for the yearly supply to them respectively of iron ore. The mines & railways were acquired by the co., & contracts for ninety-nine years dated Aug. 15, 1873, were entered into by the co. with each of the firms for the supply of ore to them. These contracts were in identical terms, except as to the amount of ore to be supplied. Clause 18 of the contract with the German firm provided that the contract (except as to that clause & as to clauses for arbn. & the settlement of accounts & the payment & receipt of money) should be suspended during any period in which "an unavoidable cause" prevented the delivery or receipt of ore, & should revive on the cessation or removal of such cause. At the outbreak of the war with Germany the German firm was indebted to the co. for ore delivered, which indebtedness was discharged by the Public Trustee:—Held: the suspensory clause, assuming it applied to a war between the countries of the contracting parties, was void as being against public policy, & the contract being an ordinary executory contract with an enemy, not connected with the proprietary right to the shares, was dissolved by the outbreak of war. — ORCONERA IRON ORE CO., LTD. v. FRIED KRUPP AKT. (1918), 87 L. J. Ch. 313; 118 L. T. 237; 34 T. L. R. 307, C. A.

407. — — — — —.] Before the outbreak of war plffs., an English limited co., made with defts., enemy cos. carrying on business in Germany, contracts dealing with the fruit trade in Germany for some years ahead. The contracts contained a clause providing for their suspension, & during such suspension plffs. were under an obligation to pay to defts. a certain sum per annum for office expenses in Hamburg. Most of the shares in plff. co. were held in the United States, but there were directors in England, who acted on instructions from America:—Held: plffs., although controlled from America, were an English co., & as the directors in England, would be personally liable if they communicated with the enemy, & as the contracts contained a provision that even during their suspension the sum payable for office expenses should continue to be paid, the contracts were not merely suspended but were void since the outbreak of war.—*ELDERS & FYFFES, LTD. v. 408. — — — — —.]—An English co., owning cupreous ore mines in Spain, on various dates before the outbreak of the war between Great Britain & Germany contracted to sell to three German cos. large quantities of this ore, to be shipped from Spain to Rotterdam or certain other Continental ports & to be delivered to the several buyers by instalments extending over a number of years. Each of the contracts contained a suspensory clause providing that, if owing to strikes, war, or any other cause, over which the sellers had no control, they should be prevented from shipping or delivering the ore, the obligation to ship & deliver should be suspended during the continuance of the impediment & for a reasonable time afterwards, & the clause contained a corresponding provision in favour of the buyers, suspending the obligation to receive in the like event. At the date of the outbreak of war some of the contracts had been partially executed, & the others were wholly executory. The contracts with one of the German cos.

were in English form; those with the two other cos. were made in Germany & were in the German language:—Held: (1) apart from the suspensory clause, the contracts were abrogated on the outbreak of war inasmuch as they involved trading with the enemy; (2) the suspensory clause, assuming that it applied to a war between the countries of the contracting parties, was void as against public policy as tending to the detriment of England & the advantage of the enemy country; (3) as regarded the German contracts, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the presumption was that the law of Germany was the same as the law of England, & assuming these contracts were valid by the law of Germany, the question whether they were void as against public policy was to be determined by the law of this country.—*ERTEL BIEBER & CO. v. Delivery was to be in about equal quantities in two years, & shipments were to be at as regular intervals as could be arranged. The contract contained a suspension clause providing for the suspension of deliveries in case of stoppage of mines or works or of loss or delay during transit owing to accidents, strikes, lock-outs, wars, civil commotions, epidemics, quarantine, dangers of the sea, or any other cause beyond the control of the sellers or the buyers during the continuance of same without liability, but the buyers undertook to receive any quantities for which the sellers should have engaged freight before receiving advice of the stoppage. The contract also contained an arbn. clause providing that any dispute arising out of the contract was to be referred to arbn. in London. After part of the ore had been delivered war was declared between the United Kingdom & Austria-Hungary:—Held: the contract was dissolved on the outbreak of war.—*NAYLOR, BENZON & CO., LTD. v. 410. — — — — —.]—Subject of allied State & alien enemy—Void.—Before the European war plffs., Belgians, carrying on business in Antwerp & London, made with deft., a German, carrying on business in Hamburg & before the war in London also, c.i.f. contracts, by which plffs. sold to deft. certain hides. After the outbreak of war deft. repudiated the contracts:—Held: (1) as plffs. were subjects of a State allied with England, the contracts, having been made with a subject of a State at war with England, became illegal on the outbreak of war, & after that date there could be no breach of them; (2) plffs. could not recover damages.—*KREGLINGER & CO. v. 411. Sale of land—By attorney under power given before donor became alien enemy.—Deft., a German by birth, but for many years resident in England, although never naturalised, being about to proceed to Germany, executed a power of attorney on May 20, 1915, by which he appointed his solr. his attorney to sell his leasehold house

& to execute such transfers & deeds as were necessary. The power of attorney was made irrevocable for twelve months. On May 26 deft. obtained a Govt. permit from the police to travel to Tilbury in order to embark for Germany, & started on that day. On June 2, 1915, the leasehold premises were sold to pltf. by public auction, & a deposit was paid & an agreement signed by him. There was no evidence as to the date when deft. reached Germany, but it was some time between May 26 & June 11, 1915. In an action for a declaration that the agreement for sale had been dissolved by the act of deft. in becoming an alien enemy:—Held: (1) the proper inference to be drawn from the facts was that at the date of the sale deft. had arrived & was resident in Germany & was an alien enemy; (2) the power of attorney having been given by deft. at a time when he was not an alien enemy, & being irrevocable for a year, was not avoided by his subsequently becoming an alien enemy; (3) the agreement entered into by the attorney in execution of the power did not involve any intercourse with the enemy, & was valid; (4) pltf. was not entitled to have the agreement rescinded.—*TINGLEY v. 412. Charterparty — Dissolved — Effect of suspensory clause.—By a charterparty made in 1913 pltf., as owners of the British s.s. F., agreed to let, & V. Co. agreed to hire, the F. for about five years. V. Co. was a Dutch co., but all its shares were held by Germans: it was managed by directors who were Germans resident in Holland, & who were subject to the control of a supervisory committee of Germans resident in Germany, & it existed for the purpose of furthering the operations of certain German cos. The charterparty provided that the vessel should only be employed in lawful trades, & it contained the following clause: "That in the event of war between the nation to whose flag the chartered steamer belongs & any European power or any other Power operating or likely to operate in European waters, charterers, &/or owners shall have the option of suspending this charter for the time during which hostilities are in progress." On the outbreak of war between Great Britain & Germany on Aug. 4, 1914, V. Co. gave notice suspending the charterparty during the continuance of hostilities:—Held: the charterparty was dissolved & not merely suspended by the outbreak of war.—*CLAPHAM S.S. CO., LTD. v. By the terms of agreement deft. was not to assign or underlet the premises without the lessor's licence, such licence not to be unreasonably withheld. On war breaking out deft. became an alien enemy. By an Ord. in Council alien enemies were prohibited from residing within certain specified areas, including W.—Held: (1) it was not the basis of the contract of tenancy that deft. should continue to be allowed by law to inhabit the flat in person;

(2) the Ord. had not the effect of extinguishing the tenancy; (3) deft. was liable for rent accrued due since the date of the Ord.:—LONDON & NORTHERN ESTATES CO. v. SCHLESINGER, [1916] 1 K. B. 20; 85 L. J. K. B. 369; 114 L. T. 74; 32 T. L. R. 78; 60 Sol. Jo. 223.

Patent—Vested in alien enemy—British licensee—Avoided.—In 1907 an international assocn., called the Verband, was formed in Germany for the purchase from a co., incorporated in the United States of America, of certain patents relating to machines for making glass bottles over a territory including the whole of Europe, & a contract was entered into by the Verband accordingly for the purchase of these patents, the purchase price being made payable to the vendors by instalments down to Mar. 1, 1917, & the vendors assigned the patents to a German co., called the Treuhand, on trust that they should assign the patents to the Verband upon payment in full of the purchase price, or re-assign them to the vendors in case of any default by the Verband. No default had in fact been made at the date of the order of the Board of Trade hereafter mentioned. up the capital of the Verband in shares proportionate to the output of glass bottles in their several countries. Under an agreement entered into between the Verband & the British assocn., which resembled the agreements entered into by the Verband with the other national assocns., the British assocn. had the right to obtain machines manufactured under the patents, & to enter into contracts with its members, granting them the right to be supplied with & use such machines, subject to certain restrictions on output. A licence was in fact granted by the British assocn. to (inter alios) their co-pltfs., an English co., which sued on behalf of themselves & all other licensees. In 1915 the Board of Trade made an order suspending the British patents in favour of one of defts., another English co., to which the Board granted a licence to make & use the inventions described in the patents. This order purported to be made under Patents, Designs, & Trade Marks (Temporary Rules) Act, 1914 (c. 27), which empowered the Board to avoid or suspend "any patent or licence, the person entitled to the benefit of which was the subject of any State at war with his Majesty." Pltfs. brought an action for a declaration that the order of the Board of Trade & the licence granted by them were null & void:—Held: (1) neither the interests of the British assocn. & their licensees, nor the lien of the vendors for unpaid purchase-money, operated to deprive the Board of Trade of jurisdiction to make the order suspending the patents & to grant the licence complained of; (2) the agreement between the Verband & the British assocn., so far as it had not then already been carried out, was avoided by the outbreak of war between Great Britain & Germany.—BRITISH ASSOCN. SECT. 5.—TRADING UNDER CROWN LICENCE.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

418. Necessity for licence—Application to allies.]

All trading with the enemy, without the King's permission, is forbidden, & property taken in such a trade is confiscable as prize to the captor. This is a universal principle of law & is not peculiar to the law of England. It makes no difference to the legal result that the intention of the parties may have been innocent, & that they had consulted the Comrs. of Customs first.

The rule that all trading with the enemy without the licence of the Crown is forbidden, & that property taken in such a trade is confiscable as prize, is enforced not only against subjects of the Crown, but also those of its allies.—THE HOOP (1799), 1 Ch. Rob. 196.

—When war breaks out between States, all commercial intercourse between citizens of the belligerents ipso facto becomes illegal, except so far as it may be expressly allowed or licensed by the head of the State. Where the intercourse is of a commercial nature, it is usually denominated "trading with the enemy." On the outbreak of a war in which a belligerent has allies, the citizens of all the allied States are under the same obligations to each allied State as its own subjects would be to a single belligerent State, with relation to intercourse with the enemy. Where such illegal intercourse is proved between allied citizens & the enemy, their property engaged in such intercourse, whether ship or cargo, is subject to capture by any allied belligerent, & is subject to condemnation in that belligerent's own Prize Cts. When such intercourse in fact takes place, the property of the persons engaged in it is confiscable whether they were acting honestly & with bona fides or not.

Whatever intercourse with an enemy is prohibited by international law, no relaxation whatever can be allowed by one State in favour of its citizens which can affect the confederate State unless expressly sanctioned by the latter. This rule must be enforced & confiscation decreed whether a person engaging in the prohibited intercourse acts innocently, in good faith, & in pursuance of advice honestly believed to be sound, or of licences or permissions honestly believed to be valid.—THE PANARIELLOS (1915), 84 L. 420. — How given.]—The consent of the Crown to legalise trade of British subjects with the enemy may be signified in a variety of ways—by a licence granted to the individual for the special occasion, by an Ord. in Council, by Proclamation, or under the authority of an Act of Parliament, to which the Crown is necessarily a party.—THE CHARLOTTA (1914), 1 Dods. 387.

421. — Withdrawal of property from enemy country.]—The ct. cannot sufficiently inculcate the duty of applying in all cases for the protection of a licence where property is to be withdrawn from the enemy's country; it is the only safe way in which parties can proceed.—THE JUFFROW CATHARINA (1804), 5 Ch. 422. — After Order in Council declaring ports not hostile.]—It belongs to the Govt. of the country to determine in what relation of peace or war any other country stands towards it; in the absence of any express promulgation of the Sovereign's will in that respect, it may be collected from other acts of the State. When the Crown has considered an enemy country as ceasing to be hostile, the subject may also consider it open to lawful commercial adventure as any other neutral State.

By Ords. in Council certain ports in St. Domingo, which had formerly been, but were no longer, in the possession nor under the dominion of France, were declared not hostile:—Held: (1) the effect was to remove entirely the restriction on trading caused by war, notwithstanding the orders were made for collateral & limited purposes, not covering in their terms the trading in question; (2) the inference as to legality of such trade was not rebutted by a subsequent Ord. in Council opening trade generally (so as to cover in its terms the particular adventure) to all ports of St. Domingo not in the possession of France; (3) since the trade required no licence from the Crown, it was not restricted by the fact of a British ship carrying a licence for trading to such ports from Great Britain with a certain specified cargo, but the British trader might carry other lawful goods, & insure his whole adventure, & recover from the underwriter a loss arising from capture by a British cruiser, for the licence itself not being necessary, the carrying of goods not included in it was no legal cause of seizure, however it might operate upon the question of costs in the Prize Ct.—*BLACKBURN v. 423. —.—.]—Though a State may be in the military possession of one or two belligerents, that will not constitute her subjects enemies to the other belligerent, if the Sovereign Power of the latter chooses to permit a continuance of commerce with them; & where an insurance was effected on property, shipped in England on account of persons who were domiciled at Hamburg, at a time when that country was in the possession of French troops, the Senate continuing to exercise the powers of civil govt. in the same manner as before:—Held: the assured were entitled to recover for a loss which happened in the course of a voyage permitted by His Majesty's Ords. in Council.

Here this country has, by the effect of these orders, placed Hamburg in different relations at different periods. In Nov., 1807, we find her treated as hostile; afterwards it was thought expedient to alter her relative situation, & to recognise her inhabitants, as persons with whom trade might be carried on, & their ships & goods were released from confiscation & condemnation. From this review of the several Ords. in Council, seeing nothing to render the inhabitants of Hamburg hostile, or persons with whom trade might not lawfully be carried on, it is unnecessary to look to the licence, for under these circumstances no licence was necessary (LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J.).—*HAGEDORN v. 425. Power to grant licence —Royal prerogative.]—By the law of the constitution of England, the Sovereign alone has the power of declaring war & peace. He alone who has the power of entirely removing the state of war has the power of removing it in part, by permitting, where he sees proper, that commercial intercourse which is partial suspension of war. On certain occasions such intercourse might be expedient. But it is not for individuals to determine on the expediency of such occasions on their own notions of commerce merely, & possibly on grounds of private advantage, not reconcilable with the general interest of the State. It is for the State alone, on more enlarged views of policy & all circumstances connected with such intercourse, to determine when it shall be permitted & under what regulations. Another principle of law, of a less politic nature, but equally general in its reception & direct in its application, forbids this sort of communication as inconsistent with the relation existing between the two countries; & that is, the total inability to sustain any contract by an appeal to tribunals of the one country, on the part of subjects of the other. The legality of commerce & the mutual use of cts. of justice are inseparable.—THE HOOP, No. 418, ante.

The ship was captured on a voyage to Galatz, then in possession of Russia, during war carried on by England, France, Turkey & Sardinia against Russia:—Held: (1) residence in the dominions of one of several belligerent allies making all trade with the common enemy illegal, & the property of such trader being liable to forfeiture in the cts. of any of the allies, it would not be competent to any one of the allies to license, on its own authority, such trade to residents within its own dominions; (2) residence in a factory under consular authority would not so far preserve the original national character as to legalise trade with the enemy of the Govt. in whose dominions the factory was situated.—THE SAN SPIRIDIONE (1856), 28 L. into the realm in neutral vessels, contrary to former navigation laws, a licence in fact granted for such purpose would not legalise an insurance upon the property so imported. If a policy were made upon the supposed efficacy of such a licence, for the purpose of covering the importation of British as well as enemy's property in that manner, the former of which was legalised by 43 Geo. 3, c. 153, ss. 15, 16, & 45 Geo. 3, c. 34, the underwriters could not at any rate recover premiums for more than the amount of the British interest insured, the assured not resisting their claim to that extent.—SHIFFNER v. 429. — By subordinate authority—East India Company.]—A ship & cargo were taken on a voyage from Madras to the Spanish settlement of Manilla, & claimed by Armenian merchants, resident in Madras, on the ground that a trade of this nature had been carried on by this class of merchants under the knowledge & permission of the Govt. of Madras, & that it had in former wars also been a trade specially privileged by the East India Co.'s governing officers in India, & by the Spanish Govt. at Manilla. There had been a subsequent permission of the Governor of Madras & of the Governor-General for the carrying on a similar trade, granted to claimants:—Held: (1) the East India Co. could not, in respect to a trade carried on with a general & public enemy of the Crown of Great Britain, relax the operations of war, so far as to license the trade of individuals with such an enemy; (2) as it was in the power of the Crown alone to declare war, so it rested with that authority only to dispense with its operations, & the ship & cargo must be condemned as the property of British subjects taken in trade with the enemy, but in the circumstances expenses of the suit should be paid out of the proceeds.—THE ANGELIQUE (1801), 3 Ch. Rob. App. 7.

430. — Commissioners of customs.]—All trading whatsoever between the subjects of the country declaring war & the country against which it is declared is wholly prohibited, & is totally & entirely illegal. The Crown alone can alter or relax that law, & it is not competent to any authority, save that by implication derived from the Crown, to relax the general prize law of the land.

During war between Great Britain & Russia, a Russian ship, coming into a British port under the protection of the Ords. in Council & discharging her cargo, instead of departing forthwith, was sold to a British subject & remained in a British port. Permission for the purchase had been given by the Comrs. of Customs:—Held: (1) no permission of the Comrs. of Customs could have the effect of legalising the sale of an enemy ship to a British subject in a British port, since no subordinate authority, or any authority short of the Crown, could change the prize law there or elsewhere; (2) the purchase of the ship by a British subject was a trading with the enemy not specially permitted by the Ords. in Council, & illegal.—THE NEPTUNE (1855), Spinks, 281.

431. Alteration of licence—Proof of authority—Validity of licence as altered.]—The limitation of time in the licence is a very important ingredient; if the party takes upon himself to extend the term of the licence, it is licentia non sumpta pudenter.

A licence had been originally granted for three months from its date; it was afterwards altered to three months from the date of the bill of lading:—Held: (1) the alteration was unsatisfactory; (2) the matter should be referred to another ct. composed of members of the Privy Council best

436. — Fraudulent misdescription as to destination.]—An Admiralty licence was obtained under Convoy Act, 1803 (c. 57), for a ship to sail without convoy, describing her as bound on a voyage to Gibraltar. In fact she sailed with instructions to make the best of her way direct to Palermo, without touching at Gibraltar, unless ordered into the bay by any cruisers she might meet in passing:—Held: (1) the licence was fraudulent & void, & would not legalise an insurance upon goods on board insured to Palermo, etc.; (2) the licence would not cover a loss which happened in the latter part of the voyage, though the ship did in fact go into Gibraltar, being compelled to it by stress of weather against the master's intentions, since if the Crown were deceived at the time of the licence granted, the licence could not be made good by what happened afterwards.—INGHAM v. A licence was applied for on Jan. 20, 1812, & was refused. The ship was captured on Jan. 24. Further application was made on Jan. 25 or 26 & was granted, the licence being dated Jan. 20:—Held: this did not protect the voyage.—THE VROW DEBORAH (1812), 1 Dods. 160.

439. Granted after voyage commenced.]—A prospective licence from the Crown for a voyage from an enemy's country, granted after the voyage has commenced, is insufficient to render it legal; but if the parties to a policy of insurance on such voyage contemplated obtaining a licence, & the risk was in fact believed to be legal, the premium may be recovered by the assured from the underwriters.—*HENRY v. The party must look for indemnification to the quarter from which he has received the injury.—THE SEYERSTADT (1813), 1 Dods. 241.

441. — Substantial compliance—Condition as to indorsement of clearance date.]—A licence to import goods from an enemy port required the date of the ship's clearance from such port to be indorsed thereon. If the defence in an action upon a policy insuring the goods is that this indorsement was not truly made, it is incumbent on deft. to prove what a clearance is, & the discrepancy between the real date of the clearance & the date indorsed. A., the manufacturer of the gunpowder, sold it to C., & contracted to deliver it free on board a ship:—Held: (1) the condition of the licence was not complied with by A.'s giving the required security, he not being the merchant exporter within the licence; (2) the ship having been captured, C. could not recover on a policy on the gunpowder.—CAMELO v. BRITTEN (1820), 4 B. & Ald. 184; 106 E. R. 906.

443. A contract was made by A. & B., plffs., British subjects, for the purchase of brandy from G. & W., merchants, of France (an enemy), to be shipped thence in a neutral ship on account of plffs. The contract was made in contemplation of obtaining a licence for that purpose, & the licence was obtained soon after the making of the contract & before it was begun to be executed:—Held: (1) it was a legal contract & might lawfully be guaranteed before the licence by defts., C. & D., other British subjects; (2) after such licence obtained the guarantors were liable in damages for non-shipment of the goods by the house in France on board a neutral ship sent there licence granted by the Board of Trade on Sept. 25, 1914, to British owners of cargo lying in a neutral port in an enemy ship to pay freight & other necessary charges to the agent of the shipowner at such port, for the purpose of obtaining possession of the cargo, did not make the contract of affreightment valid as to any further execution, or indeed since the declaration of war.—KARBERG (ARNHOLD & Co. v. cargo of grain for account of British & neutral owners under a Crown licence. The ship having been captured, it was found by the Prize Ct. that part of the cargo was enemy property, & it was condemned:—Held: (1) property imported on account of an enemy was not protected by a general licence; (2) the condemnation was right.—THE JOSEPHINE (1810), 1 Act. 313; 12 E. 456. Licence to "British subjects"—Limited to British merchants.]—The Crown may exempt any individual from the operation of a state of war, but unless there are express words to this effect to be found in a licence, its meaning will be construed as giving such liberty only to subjects of Great Britain; & a licence to "British subjects" to import, etc., means they are to import on their own account, & does not extend to importation on the account of other than British merchants.—THE HOFFNUNG (1799), 2 Ch. Rob. 161.

457. Licence to named merchants, their agents or bearer of bills of lading—Necessity for disclaiming enemy interest.]—A licence was granted to A. & Co., of London, or their agents, or the bearer of their bills of lading, to import Spanish wool from Bilbao on neutral vessels:—Held: the terms of the licence did not exempt A. & Co., in claiming goods under it, from negating enemy interest in the claim, & they were bound to certify that the goods were not the property of an enemy.—THE BEURSE VAN KONINGSBERG (1800), 2 Ch. Rob. 169.

458. — Effective bills of lading granted to persons other than licensees.]—When a licence is granted to one person, it cannot be extended to the protection of all other persons permitted by that person to take advantage of it. Subjects are not to trade with the enemy without the Govt.'s special permission; & a material object of the control which the Govt. exercises over such a trade is that it may judge of the particular persons fit to be intrusted with an exemption from ordinary restrictions of a state of war.

A cargo of flax captured while on a voyage from Rotterdam to ports in the north of England was consigned to sundry merchants there, by bills of lading, expressing their account & risk. A claim was given for the various proprietors by one of the partners of B. & S., of London, stating that a licence had been taken out for this shipment by the firm in consequence of letters from their correspondents. B. & S. had obtained a licence to import as for themselves, their agents, or the bearer of their bills of lading:—Held: claimants were not within the protection of the licence, because (1) B. & S. were not the importers, since the real & effective bills of lading consigned the goods to other persons; (2) they were not the agents of B. & S.; (3) they derived, in the circumstances, no title from bills of lading transferred from B. & S.—THE JONGE JOHANNES (1802), 4 Ch. 459. Licence to named merchant "& Co."—Who included.]—Where a licence was taken by A. for himself "& Co.," & A. made oath in subsequent proceedings that he intended to include certain other persons:—Held: as a matter of indulgence, the licence was taken in an abbreviated form, & in effect included the intended persons.—THE CHRISTINA SOPHIA (1801), cited 4 Ch. Rob. 12, 267.

460. Licence to British merchant—Double commercial domicile—Goods shipped by licensee as enemy merchant.—A licence to a British merchant to import from Holland, then an enemy country, did not protect shipments made by him in person in Holland, as a merchant of that country.

A licence was granted to R., of Birmingham, "for importation from Holland of certain goods, being his property":—Held: goods shipped for B., "but at the risk of R. during the voyage," were within the words of the licence "being his property."

If trade with the enemy is generally unlawful, it is not in the ct.'s power to admit it, beyond the degree fairly described in the terms of the licence. The ct. is not disposed to narrow the operation of a licence, especially under the severe pressure British commerce sustains in war; but it cannot bend principles of law for relief of merchants thus placed in difficulty (per CUR.).—THE JONGE KLAS-SINA (1804), 5 Ch. Rob. 296.

461. Shipment by firm containing neutral partners—Subsequently becoming alien enemies.—

A licence to export to Archangel was granted to ship's brokers on behalf of British merchants. The cargo was purchased by A., by domicile a British merchant, & shipped on the joint account of himself & his two partners B. & C. The latter were then neutrals, but before action brought became enemies. The cargo was lost by capture & confiscation. In an action on the policy of insurance:—Held: (1) the licence legalised the adventure & covered the interest of A.'s partners as well as his own, especially as since the war he was in fact sole purchaser; (2) since plff. on the record was not an alien enemy, it was no objection that he was suing for an alien enemy protected by a licence.—DE TASTET v. TAYLOR (1812), 1 Taunt. 233; 128 E. R. 318.

462. Whether enemy property protected.—

A licence was granted to A., a British resident merchant, permitting a vessel, bearing any flag except the French, to proceed in ballast from any port north of the Scheldt to Archangel, there to load a cargo of such goods as were permitted by law to be imported, & proceed with same to a port in the United Kingdom:—Held: (1) the licence was not confined personally to A., or any particular class of persons; (2) Russian subjects at Archangel, who were alien enemies, & had shipped goods under such licence for the purpose of being brought into England, were protected by it; (3) an insurance made for their benefit was legal.—ROBINSON v. TOURAY (1813), 1 M. & S. 217; 105 E. R. 81.

464. ———.—A licence was granted upon the representation of A., on behalf of different British merchants, for permitting a named ship to proceed under any colours, except the French, with a cargo of such goods as were permitted by an Ord. in Council to be exported from London to any ports within certain limits, the whole of the country within those limits being in hostility with England:—Held: (1) the licence protected the property of an alien enemy residing in the hostile country shipped on his account in this country; (2) an insurance for his benefit was legal.

It is not a correct rule of construction that, if there are no express words permitting an alien interest, the ct. cannot decide in favour of such interest except upon inevitable inference to be drawn from the licence. Certain checks were imposed by the terms of the licence, & it was fair to conclude that no other restraints were intended (per CUR.).—HULLMAN v. WHITMORE, HULLMAN v. SCOTT (1815), 3 M. & S. 337; 105 E. R. 638.

465. ——— Evidence of connection with licence necessary.—An importation from a hostile port by B., an alien enemy there resident, may be legalised by a licence to W., on behalf of British merchants, for a ship not named. But in order so to legalise it, it is not sufficient the ship's name should be indorsed on the licence at the hostile port of loading; evidence must be given connecting B. with the licence, & in the absence of such evidence the voyage is not legal, & an action will not lie on a policy of insurance effected on behalf of B.—ROBINSON v. MORRIS (1814), 5 Taunt. 720; 123 E. R. 874.

466. Licence to named merchants "& other British merchants"—Owners specified in bills of lading—Property in goods shipped.—A licence was granted permitting T. M. & Co. "& other British merchants" to import certain goods from any port of France, "being the property of the said persons or some of them, as may be specified in their bills of lading." T. M. & Co. did not themselves import goods, but guaranteed a contract by G. & Co., French merchants, to ship them on account of plffs. The goods were not shipped. In an action against T. M. & Co. as to the guarantee, it was objected that the licence did not legalise the trade since it was not made out to plffs. by name, & that neither plffs. nor T. M. & Co. had any property in the goods:—Held: (1) the protection of the licence was not confined to T. M. & Co., the persons specifically named, but included other British merchants to whom the goods belonged, & the property would have been in plffs. on shipment & importation; (2) the contract by G. & Co. was valid & the guarantee was valid.—TIMSON v. MERAC (1807), 9 East, 35; 103 E. R. 486.

467. ——— Licensee agent of persons interested.—A licence to export goods to certain places within the enemy's influence & interdicted to British commerce, granted to A. on behalf of himself "& other British merchants," etc., is sufficient to legalise an insurance on such adventure, if it appear A. was the agent employed by the British merchants really interested in it to get the licence, though he had no property in the goods himself.—RAWLINSON v. JANSON (1810), 12 East, 223; 104 E. R. 87.

468. ——— Whether enemy property protected.—If an alien enemy, commorant here under the King's licence to reside here, purchases goods for exportation, the exportation thereof by him, after his licence to reside has ceased, is not protected by a licence to trade, also obtained after his licence to reside has ceased, authorising exportation of the identical goods by B. & K. or other British merchants.—*WARIN v. 469. Licence to named merchants “& others” — Connection of “others” with licence must be shown.]—A licence was granted permitting six neutral vessels, under neutral flags, to pass unmolested to or from any port of Holland (then an enemy) from or to any port of the United Kingdom with certain goods. It was provided that A. “& other British merchants,” to whom the licence might be granted, should cause it to be delivered up to them or their agents, whenever the ship should enter any port of the United Kingdom. The licence was addressed to A. “& others.” A British merchant, other than A., interested in insurance of goods which it was claimed were protected by the licence, proved possession of the licence before the voyage commenced, & produced it at the trial:—Held: (1) not sufficient to entitle him to the benefit of the licence; (2) there must also be probable evidence to account for his possession of the licence, & to show his user of it was lawful, as by showing from whom & when he received it, & thereby connecting his own particular adventure with such general licence.—BARLOW v. M'INTOSH (1810), 12 East, 311; 104 E. R. 122.

470. ———.]—A licence to trade with an enemy granted to A. & Co. “& others” may be used by the person for whom A. & Co. were acting as agents in procuring such licence & in carrying on the adventure, though the person was a foreigner residing here under an alien licence at the time. The rule is that the “others” using the licence must connect themselves with the person to whom it is particularly granted.—FEISE v. NEWNHAM (1812), 16 East, 197; 104 E. R. 1063.

471. ——— Whether “others” includes enemies.]—A licence granted to P. B. & S., British merchants residing here, although not so stated in the licence, on behalf of themselves & others, to export goods on board a certain vessel, bearing any flag except the French, from London to any port in the Baltic, of which most were hostile, but some neutral:—Held: not to warrant an export of goods, which were property at the time of shipment of an alien enemy, a Russian residing at St. Petersburg, then a hostile port of the Baltic, to which place the cargo was consigned & at whose desire the licence was obtained by P. B. & S., since, construing the licence according to the fair meaning of the words used, P. B. & S. were to be taken to be British subjects, & “others” meant persons ejusdem generis, & did not include an alien enemy resident in the enemy country.—MENNETT v. BONHAM (1812), 15 East, 477; 104 E. R. 924.

vitiating the policy.—FLINDT v. SCOTT, FLINDT v. CROKATT (1814), 5 Taunt. 674; 128 E. R. 856.

473. Licence to named merchants—Connection of other parties with licence must be shown.]—During war with Russia a licence was issued in pursuance of an Ord. in Council to R. C. & Co., of London, merchants, permitting them to export a cargo of British manufactures by a named vessel to any Baltic port, & to import thence a cargo of grain. In an action on a policy of insurance on goods by this ship from St. Petersburg to London, interest in the goods was averred to be in D. B. & G., British merchants, Wakefield, Yorkshire:—Held: evidence was necessary to connect D. B. & G. with the licensees, as by showing that the licensees were their agents.—BUSK v. SCOTT (1815), Holt, N. P. 129; 4 Camp. 339.

477. ———.]—A licence to shipbrokers in London, on behalf of themselves & British or neutral merchants, to load & export a cargo on board a named Russian ship from London to any port in the 479. Licence to import goods to whomsoever belonging—Goods of British firm—Partner resident in enemy country.—A licence was granted to British brokers, F. & Co., resident here, permitting a ship bearing any flag to import from an enemy country (Russia) to whomsoever the property might appear to belong. Goods belonging to three partners, British subjects, one of whom resided at Hamburg, which was also hostile, were loaded at St. Petersburg under the licence, & consigned to F. & Co. The latter effected the insurance & were the consignees, but they were not interested in the goods, which were lost on the voyage to England:—Held: (1) the licence legalised the voyage; (2) F. & Co. could recover on the insurance.—FAYLE v. BOURDILLON (1811), 3 Taunt. 516; 128 E. R. 216.

480. Licence to export goods to whomsoever belonging—Restriction as to destination.—A licence to F. & Co., obtained by them as pltf.'s agents, permitting them to export in a ship named, bearing any flag except the French, specified goods from London to Dantzic or any port in the Baltic not blockaded, though the documents might represent her destination to any neutral or hostile port, & to whomsoever the property might appear to belong, protects a consignment made by a Prussian neutral alien, resident here by licence under 33 Geo. 3, c. 4, to a hostile Russian port of the Baltic; & pltf., having insured, may recover for a total loss occasioned by the act of the Govt. of Prussia, the country of which he was a native, by seizure in a Prussian port, whither the ship was driven by stress of weather.—SCHNAKONEG v. ANDREWS (1814), 5 Taunt. 716; 128 E. R. 872.

481. Position of agent of necessity.—A ship was taken on a voyage from Antwerp to London, & claimed by A. & Co. as property which had been accepted by B., their agent, at Antwerp, for their account, in satisfaction of a debt due to them from bkpt. estate of a merchant of that place, under a licence obtained by them for that purpose in Feb., 1805. B. gave a bond to the French Govt. for restitution of the ship at the conclusion of war:—Held: (1) this circumstance, if known, ought to have been disclosed to Govt. at the time of obtaining the licence; (2) since the licence was obtained in Feb., & the first mention of the bond was not till the May following, what had been done was agreeable to the intention of Govt.; (3) the parties were not to purchase, but to take from a bkpt.'s estate.

When Govt. grants a licence it must be supposed to grant all that is necessary to carry it into effect. The claimants could not go to Antwerp themselves; they were under the necessity of employing an agent; he, acting as their mandatory, under the licence, might be entitled to recover against them, though an alien enemy, a full indemnification for the terms of the assignment. They would be answerable to him if the bonds were put in suit, on their refusal to redeliver the vessel. In acceding to the terms of the bond the claimants would do no more than they were bound to do for the indemnification of their agent, & were entitled, under the fair construction of the licence, to accept the ship upon these terms, as the only terms, perhaps, upon which it could be obtained (per CUR.).—THE CLIO (alias THE WILLIAM PITT) (1805), 6 Ch. 484. — — — — ——Under a licence to A. to import goods, "the property of" A., as specified in his bills of lading, if the goods be consigned to others with particular bills of lading, a general bill of lading signed to A., without proof of some special interest in A. in the goods, will not entitle the consignment to the benefit of the licence. Otherwise, if A. had had a special property in the goods.—FEISE v. WATERS (1810), 2 Taunt. 248; 127 E. R. 1072.

485. — Raw materials—Manufactured goods ordered before war—No time for countermand.—Lace is not properly included under a licence for raw materials, but the ct. ordered the lace to be restored on proof that it was a work of long & slow process, that more time was required to countermand, that, during hostilities, there had been a more than ordinary difficulty in carrying on any correspondence with the enemy's countries, & that the orders had been given previous to the war.—THE JUFFROW CATHARINA (1801), 5 Ch. Rob. 141.

— Severance of licensed & unlicensed goods.—If a vessel brings under a licence from an enemy country a cargo of goods specified in the licence, & also certain other goods not so specified, the insurance on the licensed goods is not thereby vitiated.—*PIESCHELL v. 487. Licence to export—Severance of licensed & unlicensed goods.—Although a licence to pltf., of London, merchant, on behalf of himself & other British & neutral merchants, to export on board a certain vessel, bearing any flag except the French, a specified cargo from London to any port in the Baltic not under blockade, & to whomsoever the property may appear to belong, was held not to protect a part of the cargo which was the property of Russian subjects at the time of the shipment, Russia being then at war with England, so as to entitle pltf. to recover in respect of that part upon a policy effected by him as the agent for & by the orders of those Russian subjects, the loss being occasioned by seizure & confiscation in a Russian port by comrs. appointed by the Russian Govt., yet as the licence was also obtained & the policy effected by pltf. on his own account, & as agent for certain Hamburgers respectively interested in separate & distinct proportions of the cargo:—Held: pltf. entitled to recover in respect of his own interest & that of the Hamburgers, Hamburg being in a state of permissive neutrality with England.—HAGEDORN v. BAZETT (1813), 2 M. & S. 100; 105 E. R. 319.

Annotation:—Refd. Rucker v. Ansley (1816), 5 M. & S. 25.

488. — Unauthorised goods sent—Ulterior neutral destination—Bona fides immaterial.—Where a licence is given to the enemy's port for enumerated articles, & other articles, not inserted in the licence, are sent at the same time on the part of the British subject, such articles are subject to condemnation, notwithstanding an ulterior destination to a neutral port. Mere honesty of intention cannot be alleged as justification in such a course of transaction, which, if allowed, would leave no means of preventing fraud in an infinite number of other cases.—THE FRIENDSHIP (1801), 4 Ch. Rob. 96.

489. — Permitted quantity exceeded—Protection of permitted quantity.—At a time when exportation of gunpowder was prohibited by Royal Proclamation issued under statutory authority, an assured, licensed to export one hundred & fifty barrels of gunpowder, exported three hundred barrels:—Held: (1) exportation of one hundred & fifty barrels licensed was legal, & the insurance on them was legal; (2) he might recover against the underwriter their value.—KEIR v. ANDRADE (1816), 6 Taunt. 498; 2 Marsh. 196; 128 E. R. 1128.

490. Licence to proceed in ballast—Cargo carried under compulsion of enemy.—A licence to proceed in ballast to an enemy port, for the purpose of bringing a cargo from thence to England, will not protect the vessel carrying a cargo to a port of the enemy. The excuse that enemy authorities had compelled the master to take the cargo on board cannot be admitted. If it were, force would in all cases be employed, & in many collusively.—THE CATHERINA MARIA (1809), Edw. 337.

491. Licence to proceed to hostile ports & bring home goods—Whether enemy goods protected.—A licence to A., a British merchant, that a ship may go to a hostile port & bring home a cargo of goods, authorises importation of such goods, being the property of an alien enemy subject of that hostile country, & authorises an insurance of the goods on behalf of the alien enemy & enforcement of the contract of insurance in British cts. This species of licence has been considered an exception out of the general law, but it is now used to carry on a great part of the country's trade; unless it were so carried on, a great part of the trade must be lost, & for preserving it the licence ought to be construed liberally, not strictly, as in the case of a Crown grant (LORD MANSFIELD, C.J.).—MORGAN v. OSWALD (1812), 3 Taunt. 554; 128 E. R. 219.

C. Restrictions as to Time.

492. Voyage not completed by named day—Without fault of ship—Burden of proof.—A voyage legalised in its commencement by a licence for four months which expires during the voyage may be legally finished, if special circumstances, not in the power of the licensed person to control, clear of fraud & laches on his part, have protracted the voyage. It is incumbent on the assured to prove the special circumstances. It is not necessary that the ultimate port of discharge of a licensed ship should be specified in her clearance from Great Britain. If there are circumstances which will render the voyage legal beyond the time mentioned in the licence, they ought to be specified in such licence, & persons applying for a licence ought to apply for the full time within which a ship may with certainty be able to perform her voyage.—LEEVIN v. CORMAC (1811), 4 Taunt. 483; 128 E. R. 416.

493. — — — — —.—If a licence to trade be limited in duration to a certain day, & the vessel has not completed her voyage before the licence expires, it is incumbent on pltf. to prove that such due diligence had been used by the master of the vessel, that the adventure is still protected within the spirit of the licence. If there had been no default in the conduct of the vessel, the licence, though expired, would still have protected the adventure till its completion.—FREELAND v. WALKER (1812), 4 Taunt. 478; 128 E. R. 414.

494. — Detention & deviation—Alteration of date—Bona fides.—A voyage from Cuba to New Providence was not completed within the time limited by the licence, owing to detention by the enemy's privateers from a suspicion of having a British licence on board, & to the vessel deviating from the regular course to obtain provisions. The date of the licence had been altered, but without the master's knowledge:—Held: no fraud was attributable to the parties engaged in the transaction, which was duly conducted according to the tenor & effect of the licence.—THE DIANA (1811), 2 Act. 54; 12 E. R. 176.

495. Voyage begun out of time—Unavoidable delay.—A licence by the King in Council legalises the prosecution of the intended adventure after the time specified in the licence has expired, if the delay were caused by unavoidable necessity, whether the voyage protected commence after the licence expired or before.—EFFURTH v. SMITH (1814), 5 Taunt. 329; 128 E. R. 716.

496. Importation—Shipment within limit—Sailing out of time.—By 48 Geo. 3, c. 37, the Crown was empowered by Ord. in Council to permit the importation into Great Britain or Ireland of such goods as should be specified therein from any place, from which the British flag was excluded in any ship, whether belonging to a friendly country or not. By 49 Geo. 3, c. 60, it was made lawful under any Ord. in Council already issued or to be issued to import into the United Kingdom from any part of Europe or Africa, in any British or friendly ship, any goods which might be lawfully imported, the growth or produce of any country, on payment of duties, etc.:—Held: (1) though it was doubtful whether the former Act authorised an Ord. in Council licensing a British merchant, in general terms, to import a cargo "of such goods as are permitted by law to be imported (except German linens, stock-fish & oil)," yet an importation into Great Britain from a port of Russia under such a licence of such lawful goods in a neutral Hamburg ship was authorised by the latter Act; (2) an insurance on such goods for the voyage was legal, notwithstanding the licence was limited to be in force until Sept. 29, & the ship did not sail from the foreign port till Oct. 4, it appearing the goods were loaded on board by Sept. 12, & the adventure was then bonâ fide prosecuting under the licence, & the policy attaching at & from her loading port.—SCHROEDER v. VAUX (1812), 15 East, 52; 104 E. R. 764.

497. Original cargo destroyed—Substituted

cargo loaded out of time.]—Where the original cargo has been spoiled by unavoidable accident, the protection of a licence is not forfeited by taking in a fresh cargo of the same kind after the time for which the licence was granted had expired. The ct. puts a liberal interpretation on the intention of the Govt. & the acts of individuals under those intentions as expressed; & where the ship is in a distant port, & the foreign shippers are acting for persons in England without the ready means of communication with the principals, they are entitled to act so as not to render the licence abortive. In such a case there is no new speculation, nor any change, except such as is produced by time & unavoidable accidents.—THE WOHLFORTH (1813), 1 Dods. 305.

498. ——— ——— ———.]—A licence to trade, which is to expire on a certain day, will protect the adventure beyond that day if it be protracted by events which the licensed party cannot control.

Where a homeward cargo, shipped without laches after the licence expired, was, through perils of the sea, necessarily unladen in the course of the voyage & destroyed by fire on shore.—Held: the licence protected a cargo of other specified goods substituted for the cargo burnt.—SIFFKIN v. GLOVER (1813), 4 Taunt. 717; 128 E. R. 512.

499. ——— Ship driven back by weather—Re-loading fresh cargo out of time.]—A licence was granted to pltf. on May 25, 1810, to take a cargo from London to Archangel, & to return from thence with a cargo of grain & other goods permitted by law to be imported to any port of the United Kingdom, & the licence was limited to Sept. 29 following, which time was afterwards extended to Jan. 1, 1811. The ship, after taking in a cargo of pitch & tar at Archangel, sailed on her homeward voyage on Oct. 13, 1810, but was driven back to Archangel, there unloaded, her cargo sold, & the ship laid up for the winter; she did not sail again from thence with a cargo of wheat until Aug. 1, 1811:—Held: the licence was not exhausted by taking in the first cargo of pitch & tar, but would cover the cargo of wheat also, notwithstanding the time limited for its continuance had elapsed, provided it appeared the voyage was prosecuted with all reasonable dispatch, which was a question for the jury.—SIFFKIN v. ALLNUTT (1813), 1 M. & S. 39; 105 E. R. 15.

Annotation:—Refd. Siffkin v. Glover (1813), 4 Taunt. 717.

500. Exportation—Shipment within limit—Sailing out of time.]—If a licence to export & deliver goods to an enemy's country is granted for a limited time, it is not sufficient that the goods were shipped before expiration of the time, the ship not sailing till afterwards.—VANDYCK v. WHITMORE (1801), 1 East, 475; 102 E. R. 183.

501. ——— Delay from accident—Clearing out of time.]—Under a licence to export to a hostile country within a limited time, a ship cleared at the Custom-house in London on the day before the licence expired, but was delayed in the river by the breaking of a bowsprit, & did not obtain her clearing note at Gravesend till two days after expiration of the licence:—Held: (1) if a ship so licensed did not sail within the time limited by the licence, although delayed by accident, she was not protected by the licence; (2) the ship had not exported within the time limited; (3) there is a difference between a licence to export & a licence to import, & the former, if the time elapses, must be renewed, because the parties, being at home, can easily apply to renew.—WILLIAMS v. MARSHALL (1817), 1 Moore, C. P. 168; 7 Taunt. 468; 129 E. R. 188.

502. ——— Delay from fear of enemy—Sailing out of time.]—A licence was granted for two vessels, purchased for the purpose, sailing under any flag, to proceed from England to Holland with goods allowed by an Ord. in Council to be exported, to cruise from one port of Holland to another, & to bring back goods allowed by same Ord. to be imported to England, the licence to be renewed on application by the parties at the return from each voyage during six months from July 2, 1807. The exporter, fearing the vigilance of the Govt. in Holland, where his trade was contraband, delayed to export until after expiration of the six months, & the ship then sailed & was captured:—Held: the parties being in England, & not applying for a renewed licence, the adventure was not legalised by the original licence.—TULLOCH v. BOYD (1817), 1 Moore, C. P. 174; 7 Taunt. 472, 475; 129 E. R.

D. Restrictions as to Ship.

503. Neutral ship—Enemy ship.]—A licence to import in a neutral vessel would be no licence for an importation in an enemy's vessel. But it is sufficient for the protection of the British importer of the cargo, if the ship is visibly & to all appearance neutral. If an enemy's ship comes under a licence granted only in terms to neutral vessels, she abuses the licence, & must be considered not as coming on the faith of this Govt., but as endeavouring fraudulently to take the benefit of a licence to which she is not entitled.—THE HOFFNUNG (1799), 2 Ch. Rob. 161.

504. ——— British ship flying neutral flag.]—A licence had been obtained by British subjects for importation of sundry articles from a port of the enemy "in neutral ships":—Held: (1) the licence being for importation on board a neutral ship could not afford protection to a British ship sailing under Prussian colours & claimed by a merchant of Emden; (2) the property was subject to condemnation.—THE JONGE AREND (1803), 5 Ch. Rob. 14.

505. Named foreign ship—British interest therein—Ship appearing to be foreign.]—A licence for a named foreign ship will not protect it, if it is in fact & in appearance British; but where the ship bears every appearance of being foreign, the ct. will not inquire whether there is any British interest in the ship.—THE GUTE HOFFNUNG (1813), 1 Dods. 251.

E. Restrictions as to Port of Loading.

506. Port of loading changed—Necessity.]—A licence was granted for importation of a cargo of brandy from the port of Charente to Hull, upon a representation that same had been purchased for account of several British merchants, & was then lying at Charente. The parties' agents in France finding it difficult, if not impossible, to export this cargo from Charente, caused part of the brandy to be carried over land to Bordeaux, where it was shipped on board a Dutch ship & a copy of the licence indorsed for her protection, the original not being arrived, stating the port of shipment as at Charente. The remainder of the cargo was afterwards shipped in another vessel from Charente, bearing the original licence, & arrived at Hull:—Held: the former shipment was protected by the licence.—THE VROW CORNELIA (1811), 2 Act. 68; 12 E. R. 181.

507. Licence to sail in ballast from port north of Scheldt to foreign port to import.—Limitation not applicable to British port.]—A licence to import from any port in Norway, or to sail in ballast from any port north of the Scheldt to any port in Norway, & in either case to import from thence, authorises by the first clause a sailing from a British port, whether north or south of the Scheldt, to Norway to fetch the cargo.—LE CHEMINANT v. PEARSON, LE CHEMINANT v. ALLNUTT (1812), 4 Taunt. 367; 128 E. R. 372.

508. — Sailing in ballast not necessary condition.]—A licence was granted to sail in ballast from any port north of the Scheldt to Archangel, or any other port of the White Sea, there to take a cargo of specified goods & import them into the United Kingdom. A vessel, which had sailed from Great Britain to St. Petersburg with colonial produce, was employed under the licence to bring back a cargo of the specified goods:—Held: (1) the sailing in ballast from a port north of the Scheldt was not a necessary condition, but only permitted in order to facilitate the bringing home of the desired cargo; (2) the voyage was legalised by the licence.—STANFORTH v. COOMBE (1814), 5 Taunt. 726; 128 E. R. 876.

F. Restrictions as to Destination.

509. Whether deviation justified—General rule.]—A licence to one port of the United Kingdom will not protect a voyage to another port. An enemy, to whom a special permission to trade with the ports of England has been given, must comply strictly with the conditions under which that permission is granted. The only excuse for deviation from that course is the pressure of irresistible necessity. If the party is not within the terms of the licence, the character of enemy revives & the property is subject to confiscation.—THE MANLY (1813), 1 Dods. 257.

510. — What amounts to deviation.]—To shut up the ports of a country, & exclude neutrals from all commerce with it, is a great inconvenience upon them, although they are bound to submit to it. It is a harsh right, & though a licence is a privilege, licences in such a case are to be favourably regarded; it imports the good faith & honour of the Govt. which grants them not to press the letter too rigorously. A licence "to carry a cargo to the ports of the Vlie or elsewhere," with several provisions, amongst which there is no proviso that she shall come out again, does not prevent the licensee coming out again with a cargo, because that is a benefit incidental to the licence & inseparable from it. A ship that has entered previous to the blockade may only retire in ballast, or taking a cargo that had been put on board before the blockade.

An American vessel coming from America without any knowledge of the blockade of Amsterdam, bringing a cargo for that port, came to Falmouth, & finding that the port of Amsterdam was under blockade petitioned for a licence, & obtained from the Govt. a licence to go to Amsterdam. The terms of the permission were "to the ports of the Vlie, Emden, Rotterdam, or elsewhere." The vessel was taken entering the Texel:—Held: a licence to go through the Vlie was not substantially violated by going through another passage, unless it was shown that it contained some specific prohibition as to other passages.—THE JUNO (1799), 2 Ch. Rob. 116.

Licence not restricted by Order in Council.]—If a licence is obtained, giving a neutral wider scope than the exceptions & conditions in the Ords. in Council give, & not referring thereto, he may avail himself of privileges conferred by the licence, & is not confined by restrictions contained in those Ords. Where an Ord. in Council legalised exportation of colonial produce by neutrals clearing out from England under such regulations as His Majesty should think fit to prescribe, which should be proceeding direct to the port specified in their clearance, & the licence authorised the vessel to proceed to Sweden or any port in the Baltic, though the clearance obtained named only Gottenburg:—Held: the licence, not being founded on the Ord. in Council, but on the general power of the Crown, authorised the vessel to proceed to Pillaw, a port in the Baltic.—SPITTA v. WOODMAN (1810), 2 Taunt. 416; 127 E. R. 1139.

512. Return to port of departure—Return to intermediate port.]—A voyage was insured from Bordeaux to London, warranted with a British & French licence. The ship had previously sailed from Dantzic to London & thence to Bordeaux with a French licence, which authorised that voyage & further allowed her to load at Bordeaux for the destination of the port from which she departed:—Held: (1) the port of departure was the port of original departure at commencement of the voyage, & the French licence did not cover the voyage from Bordeaux to London; (2) the warranty was not complied with, & the assured could not recover on a policy for the voyage.—EVERTH v. TUNNO (1817), 1 B. & Ald. 142; 106 E. R. 53.

Part V.—Acquisition of British Nationality.

SECT. 1.—DENIZATION.

513. Power to grant.]—The King can grant letters patent of denization to whom & how many he will; & this power to make aliens born subjects of the realm, & capable of inheriting the lands of England as natural-born subjects, is a point of high prerogative & cannot be severed from the Crown & vested elsewhere.—CALVIN'S CASE (1608), 7 Co. 514. — Retrospective effect.]—An alien, resident in England, purchased an equitable interest in freehold lands, & also a lease for a long term of years, & afterwards obtained letters of denization, which in terms conferred upon him, not only the power of acquiring lands in future, but of retaining & enjoying all lands he had theretofore acquired:

Annotations :—Distd. & Expld. Du Hourmelin v. Sheldon (1839), 1 Beav. 79. In Fourdrin v. Gowdey Sir John Leach held that aliens could no more take an interest in land than the land itself; he must have meant to use the word "hold" instead of the word "take," because it is clear that aliens may take land, though they cannot hold it against the King (LORD LANGDALE, M.R.). Consd. Barrow v. 517. .]—An alien, domiciled & naturalised in England, is subject to the same disabilities as a natural-born subject. He is incapable of contracting a marriage which would have been void if contracted by a natural-born subject, although valid by the law of his domicile of origin, & by the lex loci contractus.

A., a native of Marburg in the Electorate of Hesse Cassel, domiciled in England, married in 1835, & in 1836 was naturalised by Act of Parliament. In 1841 he made his will. His wife having died, he went to Frankfort in 1846, & there married a sister, by the half-blood, of his deceased wife, with a view to subsequent residence in England, such marriage being valid by the law of Frankfort, & of Hesse Cassel. Soon after his second marriage he returned to England, where he died in 1856, never having since its acquisition abandoned his English domicile :—Held : A.'s second marriage was rendered void by Marriage Act, 1835 (c. 54), s. 2, & did not revoke his will.—METTE v. METTE (1859), 1 Sw. & Tr. 416; 28 L. J. P. & M. 117; 33 L. T. O. S. 139.

519. Partial naturalisation.]—The usual qualified certificate of naturalisation under the above Act effects only a partial, not a complete naturalisation; so that a Frenchman, in taking out such a certificate, does not thereby lose his status as a French subject, since by the French law he cannot be completely naturalised in a foreign country except by the authority of the French Govt.—Re BOURGEOISE (1889), 41 Ch. 520. Colonial naturalisation.]—M., a German by birth, settled in Australia in 1878, & carried on business there until 1909. In 1908 a certificate of naturalisation was granted to him under Commonwealth of Australia Constitution Act, 1900, by the Commonwealth of Australia. was brought against M. that he had failed to register himself in accordance with Aliens Restriction (Consolidation) Ord., 1916. For the defence it was contended that M. was not an alien, but the magistrate convicted him:—Held: the conviction was right, for although an alien might obtain a certificate of naturalisation in one part of His Majesty's dominions, it was not a necessary consequence that the naturalisation had any effect elsewhere, & wherever the certificate had no effect there the person to whom it had been granted still remained an alien.—*R. v. 531. — — — — — Loss of territory by treaty.]—The attempt to maintain the proposition, as applied to the United States of America, that the character of a natural-born subject of the Crown of Great Britain is indelible, & that he cannot become an alien ex post facto, is to deny the validity of the declaration of independence, as recognised by the treaty between the Crown of England & the inhabitants of the United States & sanctioned by Act of Parliament & the law of nations. All the inhabitants of those States, although born subjects of the king of Great Britain, by continuing to be inhabitants, that is, by continuing to reside permanently & for the rest of their lives in those States after the Treaty of 1783, became & were citizens of the United States & ceased to be British subjects (STUART, V.-C.).—*RITSON v. Naturalisation Act, 1870 (c. 14)—Voluntary naturalisation in foreign State.]—T., who was born in England, went abroad in 1816, & while abroad had a son, who claimed to be his only legitimate child. T. went to Switzerland in 1842 & acquired a Swiss nationality, without being required to renounce his English nationality, which in the then state of English law he could not have done effectually. He could have relinquished his Swiss nationality with the consent of the cantonal authorities, but never did so. He ultimately went to France where he died in 1878, having by his will left his property away from his son to deft. By the Swiss law, the son, if legitimate, was entitled to nine-tenths of the property as his compulsory portion, but deft.'s contention was that he was illegitimate. By virtue of a treaty between France & Switzerland, right of succession to property of Swiss subjects dying in France was regulated according to the law of their nationality. The Swiss Ct. decided in favour of the son's legitimacy, & declared him entitled to nine-tenths of the property. In an action brought here to enforce the Swiss judgment:—Held: (1) s. 6 of the above Act applied to testator, who was at his death a Swiss, not a British subject; (2) the Zurich Ct. had, according to the law of his domicile, jurisdiction to decide on the right of succession to his estate, & the Ct. was bound by the decision of the Swiss Ct.—*Re TRUFFORT, TRAFFORD v. 533. — — — — — Applicability in time of war.]—The above Act, s. 6, does not empower a British subject to become naturalised in an enemy State in time of war. The act of becoming naturalised in such circumstances is in itself an act of treason, & it is no defence to an indictment for treason for subsequently joining the military forces of the enemy.—*R. v. 532 ii. — — — — ——By the term "foreign State," in s. 6 of the above Act, must be understood a civilised State. A British subject who seeks to renounce his natural allegiance must come under some equivalent social & national restraint. A State such as can be recognised as a member of the family of nations must be one in which there has been habitual obedience by its subjects to superior authority, & a power of enforcing obedience to the laws, & the observance of the demands of international law. Samoa is not an independent State. Where the Crown has by Ord. in Council declared what is & what is not to be recognised as a foreign State, the Cts. of the Empire must take their direction from the Crown, & the question in such case is not one to be determined by a jury.—*HUNT v. Applt. was brought before a police magistrate, who ordered his deportation under Federal Pacific Island Labourers Act, 1901, s. 8:—Held: (1) the right to expel involved the right to do all things necessary to make the expulsion effective, among which was necessarily included the act of deportation to the extent of the complete exclusion of the alien from the territorial borders of the State; (2) the right of expulsion was not limited to ordering the deportation of the alien to the place whence he came, but was general & unlimited, & could be exercised by the deporting State in whatever manner & to whatever place was necessary for effective deportation.—*ROBT. The officer then read the passage slowly, deft. said that he could not write it, the passage was not read again, & the officer told deft. he was a prohibited immigrant:—Held: the dictation test was not properly put so as to make deft. a prohibited immigrant.—*POTTER v. m. — Previous judgment not admissible in subsequent proceedings.]—On the return of a habeas corpus to L. to procure the body of A., a Chinaman, L. alleged that he held A. under the authority of Commonwealth Immigration Acts as being a prohibited immigrant. The judge of the Supreme Ct. of Victoria who heard the matter found as a fact that A. was identical with a naturalised Victorian subject of the King of that name, & was domiciled in Victoria, & ordered his release. On a subsequent prosecution of A. under those Acts for being a prohibited immigrant found within the Commonwealth:—Held: such judgment was not admissible evidence upon the question of fact of the identity of A.—*CHRISTIE v. o. — Member of Australian community returning from abroad—Illegitimate child of white woman & Chinaman.]—A person, whose permanent home is in Australia, & who is a member of the Australian community, is not, on arriving in Australia from abroad an immigrant within the above Act.

The illegitimate son of a Victorian woman had his original home in Victoria, but at the age of five years was taken by his father, a Chinaman, to China, where he remained for twenty-six years:—Held: he had never abandoned that home, & on his return to Australia was not an immigrant within the above Act.—*POTTER v. The answers were taken down in writing, & the following statement added: "I made this statement of my own free will, it has been read over to me, & I have nothing to add or to alter." The accused then signed the statement after it had been translated to him:—Held: (1) the statement was not admissible in evidence against the accused; (2) a statement by another Chinaman to the interpreter, not being shown to have been made in the presence of the accused, or to have been heard by him, was not admissible; (3) the magistrate ought to have accepted the uncontradicted testimony of two persons, who had deposed to having known the accused to have been in Australia for more than two years, as discharging the onus of proof which was on the accused.—AN HOY v. HOUGH (1912), 14 W. A. R. 214.—AUS.

She alleged she was the wife of a person not a prohibited immigrant, but her husband, who had entered the Transvaal after the passing of the Act of 1908, had refused to apply for registration under this Act:—Held: as such refusal rendered him liable at the time when he entered the Transvaal to be removed from or ordered to leave the Transvaal under s. 2 (4) of the Act of 1907, he was a prohibited immigrant & applt. was also a prohibited immigrant.—*R. v. mended for deportation to Russia at expiration of his sentence. On appeal against the recommendation for deportation, applt. stated he was a deserter from the Russian army, & if he returned to that country he would be shot. Inquiries made showed that though applt. would be punished for desertion, he would not be shot:—Held: (1) while the ct. was satisfied that nothing applt. had done would expose him to the punishment of being shot, yet, having regard to all the circumstances, it was better the recommendation should not be made; (2) that part of the sentence should be quashed.—*R. v. On appeal against the part of the sentence recommending her expulsion, applt. stated she was an alien, & that she was a married woman. On this point the ct. expressed doubt, but applt. had a child living with her. In these circumstances the ct., pointing out that if applt. were married the sentence as it stood was equivalent to a decree of divorce, reversed that part of the sentence recommending applt. for expulsion. Qu.: whether a married woman living with her husband can or should be recommended for expulsion.—*R. v. 547. ——— Intercession of prosecutrix.—Applt. was convicted of fraudulent conversion & sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment with hard labour & recommended for expulsion:—Held: the ct. would not, in the ordinary course, interfere with the order recommending applt. for expulsion, which was a matter for the Home Secretary's discretion, but as it was asked on behalf of the prosecutrix to extend some mercy to him, for that reason the ct. was justified in saying that so much of the sentence as referred to the recommendation for expulsion should be annulled.—*R. v. 548. ——— Judicial discretion.—In 1893 applt., an alien, was convicted of administering a drug with intent to rob, & in 1905 was convicted of conspiracy. In 1913, on a charge of indecent assault, applt. pleaded guilty to a common assault; the judge accepted this plea, passed a sentence of imprisonment & recommended applt. for expulsion:—Held: (1) the question of recommendation for expulsion was a matter for the judge's discretion; (2) on the facts his decision to make such recommendation ought not to be reversed.—*R. v. 550. ——— Expenses of deportation—Liability of ship's master.—Where the Secretary of State makes an order for expulsion of an alien under the above Act, & pays the expenses incidental to the alien's deportation under s. 4 (1), he may under s. 4 (2) recover the sums so paid by him from the master of the ship in which the alien was brought to the United Kingdom, notwithstanding that the alien had, by secreting himself on board the ship as a stowaway, caused himself to be brought here without the master's consent.—A.-G. v. SUTCLIFFE, [1907] 2 K. B. 997; 76 L. J. K. B. 991; 97 L. T. 373; 23 T. L. R. 711.

551. Aliens Restriction Act, 1914 (c. 12)—Power of expulsion in war time—Validity of Order in Council.—Aliens Restriction (Consolidation) Ord., 1914, art. 12, whereby a Secretary of State may order the deportation of any alien, & may direct the detention of the alien pending his deportation, is within the power conferred by the above Act upon His Majesty in Council in time of war or imminent national danger or great emergency to impose restrictions on aliens.

An alien, suspected of being of immoral & criminal character, may be a person against whom an order of deportation under the above art. may properly be made as being necessary or expedient with a view to the safety of the realm.—R. v. BRIXTON PRISON (GOVERNOR), Ex p. SARNO, [1916] 2 K. B. 742; 86 L. J. K. B. 62; 115 L. T. 608; 80 J. P. 389; 32 T. L. R. 717; 14 L. G. R. 1060.

552. ——— Power to specify destination.—The above Act, s. 1 (1), & Aliens Restriction (Consolidation) Ord., 1916, made thereunder, do not give a Secretary of State power to order the deportation of an alien to any particular country. They do, however, empower a Secretary of State, upon making a deportation order, to cause the alien to be detained & placed on board a ship which the Secretary of State selects, & there detained until the ship finally leaves the United Kingdom, with the result that the alien may be obliged to disembark at the port to which the ship sails.

The jurisdiction of the Secretary of State to make a deportation order under the above Act & Ord. is not affected by the fact that the alien is a political refugee, though that fact may properly be taken into account by the Secretary of State in considering whether in the exercise of his discretion he will make a deportation order.

The ct. refused to make absolute a rule for a writ of certiorari to bring up an order made by the Home Secretary under the above Act & Ord. that the alien "shall be deported from the United Kingdom," the order being in form a valid order, though the Home Secretary stated that it was intended under the order to send the alien to a particular country.—R. v. HOME SECRETARY, Ex p. CHATEAU THIERRY (DUKE), [1917] 1 K. B. 922; 86 L. J. K. B. 923; 116 L. T. 226; 81 J. P. 125; 33 T. L. R. 264; 61 Sol. Jo. 367; 15 L. G. R. 351, C. A.

553. ————The Home Secretary made an order under the above Act, & Aliens Restriction (Consolidation) Ord., 1916, art. 12, that a certain alien, a French subject, of military age, should be deported from the United Kingdom & should remain out of the United Kingdom during the continuance of the war. The order was made in consequence of an arrangement between the French & British Govts., by which French subjects resident in the United Kingdom, who were liable to military obligation in France, were sent to France. At the same time the Home Secretary gave directions that the orders should be enforced immediately. The Home Secretary had previously given general directions that any person named in a deportation order which was intended to be enforced immediately should be arrested & conveyed by ship from the United Kingdom & should be detained between the time of his arrest & the sailing of the ship selected for his passage. Acting under those general directions an assistant secretary in the Home Office caused instructions to be given to the police for the alien's arrest & conveyance to the ship selected for his deportation. The alien was accordingly arrested. On an application for a writ of habeas corpus:—Held: the order for arrest was a valid order, & applt. was in legal custody.

Semble: (1) an order for the arrest & detention of an alien against whom a deportation order has been made must be made by the Secretary of State himself in each individual case, & in this particular case this had been done; (2) the ct. can go behind an order for arrest which is valid on its face, as for instance, if it is a mere sham not made bonâ fide.—R. v. CHISWICK POLICE STATION SUPERINTENDENT, Ex p. SACKSTEDER, [1918] 1 K. B. 578; 87 L. J. K. B. 608; 118 L. T. 160; 82 J. P. 137; 34 T. L. R. 279; 62 Sol. Jo. 363; 16 L. G. R. 335, C. A.

Part IX.—Registration, Internment, and other Restrictions.

554. Aliens Restriction Act, 1914 (c. 12)—Aliens Restriction (Consolidation) Orders, 1914–1916—Registration.]—The above Ord. of 1914, made under the above Act, contained a provision requiring aliens to register their names, & non-compliance with this requirement was made an offence:—Held: if, in registering his name, an alien, for the purpose of concealing his identity, did not give his full name, he committed an offence, even if he gave the name by which he was generally known.—SILVERMAN v. HUNT (1915), 31 T. L. R. 410.

555. ———.]—Applt.'s father was living in Berlin at the time of his marriage to applt.'s mother, who was a German, in 1874. Applt.'s parents resided in South Africa for some time between 1881 & 1891, & during that period a certificate of naturalisation under the laws of Cape Colony was issued to applt.'s father. In 1891 applt.'s parents returned to Berlin, & applt. was born there in 1893. Except for the period between 1881 & 1891, applt.'s father from an early age resided continuously in Berlin. Applt. came to England in 1913, & had since resided in London. Upon an information charging applt. with having failed to comply with the above Ord. of 1914, by furnishing to the registration officer of his district particulars as to the matters specified in the Ord., the magistrate held that applt. had failed to discharge the onus cast upon him by s. 1 (4) of the above Act of showing that he was not an alien enemy, & convicted applt.:—Held: the nationality of applt. depended upon that of his father, & upon the evidence his father's nationality was left in doubt, & applt. was properly convicted.—KOPELOWITZ v. McLAUGHLAN (1916), 85 L. J. K. B. 1700; 114 L. T. 1037; 80 J. P. 263; 25 Cox, C. C. 384; 14 L. G. R. 1074.

556. ———.]—Applt. had failed to register as an alien enemy or furnish particulars required by the above Ord. of 1914. He was born in Germany in 1869. In 1887 he emigrated to the United States, in 1891 obtaining a document of discharge from his German nationality. In 1894 he obtained a certificate of naturalisation as an American citizen. For many years after this he lived & worked in London, & in 1915 he applied to be registered at the American Consulate in London as an American citizen. This registration was refused. The magistrate, before whom applt. was summoned for non-compliance with the above Ord., convicted him on the ground that he, being admittedly an alien of German origin & not a citizen of the United States, had failed to show that it was not incumbent on him to register as a German during the war:—Held: the conviction was right.

Under s. 1 (4) of the above Act, when a question arises whether a person charged with an offence against Aliens Restriction (Consolidation) Ord., 1914, is an alien, or whether he belongs to a particular class of alien, the onus of proving that he is not an alien, or does not belong to the particular class, is upon him, & if the magistrate is not satisfied that the person has discharged this onus, the magistrate's finding is, apart from the admission or rejection of evidence, one of fact & not of law, & there is no ground for the review by the ct. of his decision on appeal.

The stat. has to some extent superseded the principles of the common law in regard to the law & evidence as to nationality (LORD READING, C.J.).—SIMON v. PHILLIPS (1916), 85 L. J. K. B. 656; 114 L. T. 460; 80 J. P. 197; 32 T. L. R. 243; 25 Cox, C. C. 315; 14 L. G. R. 476.

557. ———.]—A naturalised alien had originally, on signing a form in pursuance of National Registration Act, 1915 (c. 60), described himself as "Russian Naturalised British." In the registration card issued to him he was by mistake described as "Russian." He adopted the mistake, & being thus already a person deemed to be of British nationality, applied to a registration officer to be registered under the above Act of 1914, & art. 19 of the above Ord. of 1916, as of Russian nationality. He was convicted under art. 27 (2) of the above Ord. of having unlawfully furnished the registration officer with false particulars, & appealed upon the ground that the art. did not make it an offence for a person who was not an alien to furnish false particulars, & that he was not an alien when he furnished the particulars in question:—Held: the offence under the art. of furnishing false particulars to a registration officer was not confined to aliens, but applied equally to British subjects & aliens who had become naturalised as British subjects.—AGDESHMAN v. HUNT (1917), 86 L. J. K. B. 1334; 117 L. T. 406; 81 J. P. 251; 15 L. G. R. 620.

War Precautions Act, 1914—1915 (No. 10 of 1914, No. 2 of 1915), s. 4—War Precautions Regulations, 1915—Belief of Minister of Defence.]—Held: reg. 55 (1) of the above regulations was a valid exercise of the power conferred by the above sect. To a writ of habeas corpus in respect of W., who had been naturalised & was detained in military custody, the military officer, in whose custody W. was, returned a warrant under the hand of the Minister of Defence, which recited that the Minister, upon information furnished to him, had reason to believe & did believe that W. was disaffected or disloyal. The Minister being called as a witness refused on the ground of public policy to state the grounds of his belief:—Held: (1) the Minister was entitled to refuse to answer questions as to his belief; (2) there was no evidence to challenge either the fact of his belief or the grounds for it; (3) the detention of W. under the warrant was justified.—LLOYD v. WALLACH (1915), 20 C. L. R. 299.—AUS.

not interfering with the management thereof, but his private income & the wife's profits from the school were paid into a joint banking account, upon which applt. & his wife drew. The school was carried on in one of two adjoining houses communicating with each other, applt. & his wife living in the other, of both of which they were joint lessees. One of the school boarders was the daughter of Dutch parents resident in Java, & they, being desirous of living near their child, were received by applt.'s wife as paying guests for a substantial period. Applt. knew of this arrangement, but not of its terms. He was charged under the above art. with failing to keep a register of aliens residing on his premises, & was convicted:—Held: there was evidence to support the conviction.—VECSEY v. SMITH (1916), 86 L. J. K. B. 249; 115 L. T. 833; 81 J. P. 1; 33 T. L. R. 15; 14 L. G. R. 1167; 25 Cox, C. C. 586.

559. Defence of Realm Consolidated Regulations, 1914—Restrictions on residence.—N., a person of German origin, was naturalised as a British subject in 1909. An order was made against him in Feb., 1916, under reg. 14 of the above regulations, by the competent military authority of the district in which he resided, that he should not reside in or enter certain areas except with the permission of a competent naval or military authority; & also that he should leave the area in which he then resided & report his new place of residence, & should not subsequently change his residence without the leave of such authority. N. applied for writs of certiorari & prohibition to the competent military authority:—Held: as the competent military authority had acted honestly in the exercise of his judgment in making the order, he had jurisdiction to make it, & it was not necessary for him to show in addition that he had acted "reasonably."—R. v. DENISON, Ex p. NAGALE (1916), 85 L. J. K. B. 1744; 115 L. T. 229; 80 J. P. 421; 32 T. L. R. 528; 60 Sol. Jo. 527; 14 L. G. R. 1088.

560. — Internment—Application to British subjects.—Reg. 14b of the above regulations, which empowers the Secretary of State to order the internment of any person "of hostile origin or assocns." where on the recommendation of a competent naval or military authority it appears to him expedient for securing the public safety or the defence of the realm, is authorised by Defence of the Realm Consolidation Act, 1914 (c. 8), s. 1 (1), which confers upon the King in Council power during the continuance of the war "to issue regulations for securing the public safety & the defence of the realm"; & an order made in accordance with

reg. 14b for the internment of a naturalised British subject of German birth is valid.—R. v. HALLIDAY, Ex p. ZADIG, [1917] A. C. 260; 86 L. J. K. B. 1119; 116 L. T. 417; 81 J. P. 237; 33 T. L. R. 336; 61 Sol. Jo. 443; 25 Cox, C. C. 650, H. L.

561. — Obtaining passport by fraud.—Appcts., Russian subjects of military age, obtained passports from the Russian Consul in London by statements that they intended to go to Russia. When they reached Christiania they embarked on a Danish vessel bound for the United States. This vessel was stopped by the British naval patrol & directed to go to the port of Kirkwall by virtue of an arrangement between the British & Danish Govts., whereby search for contraband was to be made in port & not on the high seas. When the vessel was in the port of Kirkwall the appcts. were arrested, & they were afterwards taken to London & summarily charged with having obtained the passports by falsely stating that they intended to return to Russia, the charge being made under the above regulations. No complaint as to the arrest was made by the Russian or the Danish Govt. On the argument of a rule nisi for a writ of prohibition to the magistrate, it was contended that, as the offence charged was neither extraditable nor prejudicial to the safety of the realm, the arrest of appcts. being subjects of a friendly State on a neutral vessel, which, though in a British port, was only there by constraint, was unlawful:—Held: without deciding whether the right to arrest in a British port a foreigner on a neutral vessel, which was only there for the purpose of being searched for contraband, did not extend to offences which were neither extraditable nor prejudicial to the safety of the realm, the offence of obtaining a passport by false statements in time of war was an offence prejudicial to the safety of the realm, & a writ of prohibition must be refused.—R. v. GARRETT, Ex p. SHARF, [1917] 2 K. B. 99; 86 L. J. K. B. 894; 116 L. T. 398; 81 J. P. 145; 33 T. L. R. 305; 25 Cox, C. C. 627, C. A.

In this case deft. took my dog, & though it only be kept for my pleasure still I have property in it. When I have taken a fowl & by my industry have tamed it by restraining its liberty, then I have especial property therein seeing that by my labour it became obedient, & then it is not lawful for any one to take it, e.g., deer in my park, fish in my pond ; aliter if they are in the river. It is the same of any tame animal which is useful to my house ; aliter if it escapes. Thus if I have a singing bird, although it be of no profit to me still it gives me pleasure, & if any one takes it from me I should have an action. In this case a hound is useful for several purposes ; it can go out with me & protect me from assault, or can track down a thief. Thus a cur is useful to a shepherd, & if one takes it out of his possession he suffers damage (BROOK, J.).—FILOW'S CASE (1521), Y. B., 12 Hen. 8, fo. 3, pl. 3.

6. Animals generally.]—Larceny cannot be committed in some things whereof the owner may have a lawful property, & such whereupon he may maintain an action of trespass, in respect of the baseness of their nature, as mastiffs, spaniels, greyhounds, bloodhounds, or of some things wild by nature, yet reclaimed by art or industry, as bears, foxes, ferrets, etc., or their whelps or calves, because, though reclaimed, they serve not for food but pleasure, & so differ from pheasants, swans, etc., made tame, which, though wild by nature, serve for food. Only of the reclaimed hawk, in respect of the nobleness of its nature, & use for princes & great men, larceny may be committed, if the party know it to be reclaimed.— (undated), 1 Hale, P. C. 512.

SECT. 2.—WILD ANIMALS.

SUB-SECT. 1.—ALIVE.

A. In General.

17. Animals generally — Distinction between property in wild & domestic animals.—If a man has a close adjoining a forest or park & allows his fence to be defective, & wild animals escape into it from the forest, it is not lawful for the owner of the forest to take them outside the forest, as he has no property in them & his pursuit of them would be a trespass.

There is a distinction between wild & domestic animals, as the owner of the latter has property in them & may retake them, as they have escaped from the fault of the other (BRIAN, C.J.).—ANON. (1496), Keil. 30; 72 E. R. 186.

Annotation:—Refd. Davies v. Powell (1738), Willes, 46.

18. — Nature of property.—A man may have a special or qualified property in things which are feræ naturæ, three ways: ratione infirmitatis, ratione loci, & ratione privilegii.—CHILD (CHILDE) v. GREENHILL (1639), Cro. Car. 553; March, 48; 79 E. R. 1077; sub nom. GREENHILL'S CASE, W. Jo. 440.

Annotation:—Apld. Pollexfen v. Crispin (1671), 1 Vent. 122.

Domestication.—A man has a property ratione loci in animals which are feræ naturæ on his land; but this property ceases when they quit or are hunted off the land. The right of the owner of a forest or warren in the animals of the forest or warren continues after they are hunted out of the forest or warren, but not after they voluntarily quit it.

A man has an absolute property in feris natura sua mansuetis; he has a qualified property in feris mansuetis; & he has a possessory property in feris. Now whoever has this possessory property which is also a property ratione privilegii, there he may declare for the thing killed or taken without saying it was suum (HOLT, C.J.).—SUTTON v. MOODY (1697), 1 Ld. Raym. 250; 3 Salk. 290; Holt, K. B. 608; 1 Com. 34; Comb. 458; 5 Mod. 375; 91 E. R. 1083.

Edwards* (1864), 17 C. B. N. S. 245.

20. — Statutory reservation of hunting.—An Act of Parliament for allotting the land of a stinted pasture of a manor for the purposes of improvement (in which manor there was no right of free warren) declared all the allotments freehold to all intents & purposes. It then reserved to the lord the right to mines & the right to get the minerals, making compensation for damage to the herbage, & it declared the allotment to him to be in full recompense & satisfaction for all his right & interest as lord of the manor in & to the residue of the stinted pasture. It provided that he should enjoy signories, royalties, etc., & "also right of hunting, shooting, fishing & fowling in, through & over the stinted pasture & every part & allotment thereof & all other signories to the lords of the manor belonging (except those barred by the Act) in as full & ample a manner as if the Act had not been passed":—Held: the lord still possessed the exclusive right of hunting, shooting, etc., over the allotments.

Such a right is an interest in the realty which is well known to the law. The property in animals feræ naturæ while they are on the soil belongs to the owner of the soil, & he may grant a right to others to come & take them by a grant of hunting, shooting, fowling, & so forth; that right may be granted by the owner of the fee simple, & such a grant is a licence of a profit à prendre (LORD CAMPBELL, C.).—EWART v. GRAHAM (1859), 7 H. L. Cas. 331; 29 L. J. Ex. 88; 33 L. T. O. S. 349; 23 J. P. 483; 5 Jur. N. S. 773; 7 W. R. 621; 11 E. R. 132, H. L.

PART II. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 1.—A.

19 i. Animals generally—Domestication—Escape & recapture.—Wild animals are no longer the property of a man than while they continue in his keeping or actual possession; but if they regain their natural liberty, his property ceases until they have a mind to return, which is only to be known by their usual custom of returning, or are instantly pursued by their owner, for during such pursuit his property remains.—CHOYTUN CHURN DOSS v. SYLHET COLLECTOR (1873), 21 W. R. 75. —IND.

21. Killing by trespasser.]—Title to property created merely by the act of reducing a thing in possession necessarily implies a reduction into possession effected by an act which is not in any way of a wrongful nature. Such an act, therefore, effected by one who is at the moment a trespasser cannot create a title to property.

Game chased & killed on the land of A. is his property; & where a stranger, without A.'s permission, killed coney on the land of A., & immediately took them up & carried them away & sold them to a third person:—Held: the servants of A. were justified in taking possession of them as being the property of A.—BLADES v. HIGGS (1865), 20 C. B. N. S. 214; 11 H. L. Cas. 621; 6 New Rep. 274; 34 L. J. C. P. 286; 12 L. T. 615; 29 J. P. 390; 11 Jur. N. S. 701; 13 W. R. 927; 144 E. R. 1087, H. L.; affg. 13 C. B. N. 22. Hawk—Reclaimed or tame.]—In trover for a hawk deft. pleaded that the hawk first after its loss came to the hands of G., who sold it to R., who gave it to deft., who sold it to P., etc. On demurrer exception was taken to the count because it was not expressly alleged that the hawk was reclaimed or tame, & judgment was given against pltf. Afterwards a new action upon the case was brought for a reclaimed hawk called a lanner cum tintinnabulis, etc., & the matter was compounded for forty sheep & one ram.—FINES v. SPENCER (1572), 3 Dyer, 306b; 73 E. R. 692.

23. — Trespass for injury to.]—Trespass for that deft. accipitrem ipsius F. percussit with his staff, upon which stroke the hawk died. Verdict for pltf. It was moved in arrest of judgment that the declaration was not good, for it did not show that the hawk was reclaimed:—Held: the declaration was sufficient, being in an action of trespass for striking & killing, etc., which he only might have who had the possession.—VINCENT v. LESNEY (1625), Cro. Car. 18; 79 E. R. 621.

24. — Trover—Form of declaration.]—In trover for a hawk, judgment was given for pltf. It was moved in arrest of judgment, because it was not said in the declaration that it was a tame hawk, the words being accipitricem suum, Anglice vocat' a

26 i. Rabbits—Warren—Waste.]—To break up a rabbit-warren, unless it be a warren by charter or prescription, is not waste at common law, & the ct. will not grant an injunction to prevent it. Qu.: if the warren be demised as such.—LURTING v. CONN (1850), 1 I. Ch. R. 273.—IR.

c. Rabbits & deer—Escaping from park—Property.]—In 1898 W. came into possession of a demesne where there were rabbits & deer, which trespassed upon adjoining lands in the occupation of B. W.'s predecessor had, on two occasions, let loose foreign rabbits, with a view to the improvement of the breed, & W. had, since he entered into possession, trapped the rabbits for profit, & exported them to England, but had done nothing to improve them or increase their numbers. Rabbits bred in considerable numbers on B.'s land as well. The deer, which at one time had been confined within a walled deer-park in the demesne, broke loose in the year 1893 through a temporary breach in the wall, & only a portion were recaptured. The remainder had since been wandering about the demesne, breeding there, & trespassing continuously on B.'s lands, but always returning to the demesne. W. with his friends occasionally shot the deer for sport; & in response to B.'s complaints, told him that he might shoot them, & in fact, gave it out generally in the neighbourhood that he desired that any one who could shoot might do so. At the same time he kept a wood-ranger, whose duty it was to look after the deer, & his predecessor had occasionally fed the deer in winter time with hay, laurels, & oats:—Held: (1) W. was not liable in respect of the damage done by trespass of the rabbits; (2) there was evidence to support the finding of the jury that the deer were W.'s deer, were tame & "kept" by W., & under his control, & W. was liable for any damage done by the deer to B.'s land & crops.—BRADY v. WARREN, [1900] 2 I. R. 632.—IR.

25. Swans—Title by prescription.]—All white swans not marked, which having gained their natural liberty & are swimming in an open & common river, may be seized to the King's use by his prerogative, & all those, the property whereof is not known, do belong to the King by his prerogative; & so whales & sturgeons are Royal fish & belong to the King by his prerogative. But the subject may have property in white swans not marked, as some may have swans not marked in his private waters, the property of which belongs to him, & not to the King; & if they escape out of his private waters into an open & common river, he may bring them back & take them again. But if they have gained their natural liberty & are swimming in open & common rivers, the King's officer may seize them in the open & common river for the King; for one white swan, without such pursuit as aforesaid, cannot be known from another; & when the property of a swan cannot be known, the same being of its nature a fowl Royal belongs to the King. So every one who has swans within his manor, that is to say, within his private waters, has a property in them; one may prescribe to have a game of swans within his manor as well as a warren or park; he who has such a game of swans may prescribe that his swans may swim within the manor of another; a swan may be an estray & so cannot any other fowl.—CASE OF SWANS (1592), 7 Co. Rep. 15b; 77 E. R. 435.

26. Rabbits—Escaping from warren—Property.]—If a man makes a rabbit-warren on his own land, & the rabbits wander on to the adjoining land & do damage, no action lies, as they are not deft.'s conies when they are out of the warren, notwithstanding that the making of the warren would seem to be the cause of the damage, but the making of a warren is presentable in the ct. leet, & finable there.—ANON. (1595), Moore, K. B. 420; 72 E. R. 669.

27. — Manor—Waste by lessee.]—In an action for waste against the lessee of a manor & a warren, for that he had destroyed a cony borough:—Held: (1) waste lay for a warren; (2) it was not waste to destroy cony boroughs, because there was no inheritance in conies & a man could have no property in them but only possession.—MOYLE v. MAYLE (1599), Owen, 66; 74 E. R. 905.

d. Ostrich—Trespass—Measure of damages.]—Z. trespassed upon the land of V. & drove off from it & appropriated certain young wild ostriches, which had been reared upon it. 28. — Commoner's rights.]—Trespass for breaking pltf.'s liberam warrennam & taking, killing & carrying away conies. Deft. pleaded justification in that he was seised in fee of a messuage & land & had common by prescription appertaining thereto, in the place where, & that he was ready to use his common, & many conies being there damage feasant & spoiling the grass, he entered to chase them out:—Held: (1) the plea was not good; (2) the lord might have beasts of warren, & the commoner could not destroy them, & should the lord surcharge the common & deprive him of his common, he ought to have his remedy by assize or action upon the case, but could not kill the conies no more than he might kill any other beasts of the lord's; (3) so long as conies were in the lord's own land, the lord had property in them, but when they went out he had no longer property in them.—HADDEN (HODDESDON, HOLDESDEN) v. GRYSSEL (GRESEL) (1607), Cro. In an action for damage done to the crops by the rabbits which came out of the wood:—Held: (1) rabbits were not property; (2) deft. was not the owner of them, & there was no duty or obligation with reference to them, either express or implied, & no contract by him that he would kill them or keep them down.—WOOLWICH v. GATAKER (1868), 32 J. 32. — Trespasser—Free or several piscary.]—In trespass for fishing in separati piscaria of pltf., a verdict was found for pltf. In arrest of judgment it was objected that pltf. had declared of taking of pisces suos, whereas being feræ naturæ pltf. had not property in them:—Held: (1) while in a general sense they could not be said pisces ipsius, in a particular sense they might; (2) in the present case pltf. had them by reason of privilege, & he was entitled to judgment.—CHILD (CHILDE) v. GREENHILL

After verdict for them, it was moved in arrest of judgment that, unless in a trunk or pond, the fishes were improperly called pisces suos, there being no more property in fishes in a several piscary than in a free piscary:—Held: good upon demurrer, by reason of the local property, for he that had possession had property.—POLLEXFEN (POLYXPHEN) v. CRISPIN (1671), 1 Vent. 122; 2 Keble, 757, 765; 86 E. 34. — Profit à prendre.]—E. granted by deed to pltfs. for a term of years "the exclusive right of fishing" in a defined part of the river C., with a proviso that "the right of fishing hereby granted shall only extend to fair rod & line angling, & to netting for the sole purpose of procuring fish baits." Deft. wrongfully discharged into the stream water loaded with sediment, the effect of which was to drive away the fish & injure the breeding:—Held: (1) the grant did not give a mere licence to fish, but a right to fish & to carry away the fish caught; (2) this was a profit à prendre & was an incorporeal hereditament; (3) pltfs. had a right of action against any one who wrongfully did any act, by which the enjoyment of the rights given to them by the deed was prejudicially affected.—FITZGERALD v. FIRBANK, [1897] 2 Ch. 96; 66 L. 35. Musk cat, monkey & parrot—Trover.]—In an action of trover & conversion of one hundred musk cats & sixty monkeys, after verdict, it was moved in arrest of judgment that the declaration did not show that they were tame or reclaimed:—Held: (1) the declaration was sufficient, for they were merchandise & valuable; (2) likewise in an action for a parrot.—GRYMES v. SHACK (1610), Cro. 36. — — — — —.]—In an action upon the case of trover & conversion of three monkeys & divers musk cats, after verdict, it was moved in arrest of judgment that the declaration did not allege the monkeys were reclaimed:—Held: if the action had been for sixty musk cats taken & a parrot, the action would well lie; in case of hawks, there the declaration ought to allege that they were reclaimed, but in the case of monkeys, as there, the declaration was good without showing that they were reclaimed.—ANON. (1610), 1 Bulst. 95; 80 E. 37. Pigeons—At large or in dovecot.]—In doves in a dovecot there is jus proprietatis & privilegii. So trespass lies for taking a goshawk in respect of the place, & so of other things which are feræ naturæ. And if a deer goes out of a park, albeit it be in the King's case, yet it is lawful for the owner of the soil to take it, if it be in the place where the deer has chase & re-chase. So trespass lies quare columbare fregit et columbas cepit; but trespass does not lie for killing of doves, but there is a quære of an action upon the case. A man has property in the doves only by the possession, for being at large, they are nullius in bonis, & when they are in his possession, to wit, in a dovecot, they do no harm to any.—

39. — Whether distrainable.]—Deer in an inclosed ground are subjects of property ratione loci & are distrainable for rent. The reason why deer have been said not to be distrainable is because they were considered as things not of profit & in which no man could have a valuable property; but that fails now that they are chiefly kept for profit & not for pleasure.—DAVIES (DAVIS) v. 41. — Personal property, not part of inheritance.]—Deer in a park (though an ancient & legal park) may be so tame & reclaimed from their natural wild state as to pass to exors. as personal property.

In trover by exors. against the heir, it appeared that deer had been kept in a park over 900 acres in extent, which deer were tended by keepers & fed in winter with hay, beans & other food, etc. The jury found for pltf., observing that the animals had been originally wild but had been reclaimed:—Held: (1) deer are now ordinarily kept for ornament & profit & rarely for sport, their whole management differing but little from that of sheep or other animals kept for profit; (2) the verdict was sufficient in law; (3) while each case must depend upon the particular facts, in that case the facts were such as were proper to be submitted to the jury.—MORGAN v. A tenant for life under the will from time to time purchased deer & added them to the herd for the purpose of improving it. The deer in the herd at the time of testator's death having died:—Held: (1) the herd of deer did not belong to the tenant for life absolutely, but she was only entitled to their reasonable use & enjoyment as in the case of farming stock; (2) the deer which had been added to the herd by the tenant for life must be taken to have been added in accordance with her obligation to maintain the herd, & they became subject to the trusts of the will.—PAINE v. 47. Whether birds of warren—Foreshore—Right of wild fowlers.]—Action brought by the lord of certain manors adjoining a tidal & navigable river for trespass on the foreshore parcel of the manors, in a boat & on foot, for the purpose of shooting wild duck. Deft. denied that the foreshore was parcel of the manors, & even if it were, he claimed the right to go upon the foreshore & shoot & carry away wild duck on the ground of immemorial user, in four alternative ways: (1) as a member of the public in exercise of a general right of all the King's subjects in & over the foreshore of a tidal navigable river; (2) as one of the inhabitants of the manors by virtue of a presumptive trust or reservation in their favour; (3) as an inhabitant of the manors, being a wild-fowler by occupation, by virtue of a custom of the manors; (4) by prescription as a right in gross enjoyed by him & his ancestors:—Held: there was not sufficient evidence of user to enable the ct. to presume the existence of a trust, or to establish a prescriptive right.

The right claimed to kill & carry away wild duck is, whether wild fowl are birds of warren or mere wild birds in which there is no property, a profit à prendre & cannot be claimed by custom, but semble, wild duck are birds of warren.—*FITZHARDINGE (LORD) v. 48. Rooks—Disturbance of rookery.—A declaration stated that pltf. was possessed of a close of land with trees growing thereon, to which rooks had been used to resort & settle & build nests & rear their young in the trees, by reason whereof pltf. had been used to kill & take the rooks & their young, & great profit & advantages had accrued to him, yet deft. wrongfully & maliciously intending to injure pltf., alarm & drive away the rooks, & cause them to forsake pltf.'s trees, wrongfully & injuriously caused guns loaded with gunpowder to be discharged near pltf.'s close, & disturbed & drove away the rooks, whereby pltf. was prevented from killing the rooks & taking the young. Plea, not guilty. On motion in arrest of judgment:—Held: (1) the action was not maintainable, as rooks were a species of birds feræ naturæ, destructive in their habits, not known as an article of food or alleged so to be, & not protected by any Act of Parliament; (2) pltf. could not have any property in them, or show any right to have them resort to his trees.—*HANNAM v. 50. Swarming in another's trees.—Pltf. saw a swarm of bees leaving one of his hives & alighting on the branch of an apple tree in deft.'s garden, which was next to his. Pltf. wished to go to the tree to try to take the bees, but deft. would not allow him to enter his garden. Eventually deft. permitted pltf. (subject to his liability, if any, for trespass) to go into his garden to take the bees. In the meantime deft.'s son had, as agent of his father, been to the apple tree & shaken the bees to the ground, where they remained in a cluster. As soon as pltf. came up to them to hive them they flew right up to the sky, a course which the bees would most likely have taken if pltf. had gone in the same unskilful way to the tree at first. In an action for damages for the loss of the swarm of bees:—Held (1) bees were a sort of wild animals, but a man who hived them had property in them, & the property in the bees remained in pltf. when they alighted on deft.'s tree, for pltf. had not lost sight of them, & could identify them; (2) the shaking of the bees from the tree was an illegal act, & if the bees had flown to the sky instead of clustering on the ground, deft. would have been liable for destroying pltf.'s chance of taking his bees; (3) in the present case the wrongful act of deft. caused no appreciable damage to pltf., & the action failed.—QUANTRILL v. SPRAGGE (1907), 71 J. P. Jo. 425.

51. Grouse—Trespass for killing & taking.—The franchise of free warren is of great antiquity & very singular in its nature; it gives a property in wild animals, which property may be claimed in the land of another to the exclusion of the owner of the land. But such a right ought not to be extended by inference to any animals not clearly within it. Pheasants & partridges are certainly birds of warren, but grouse are not, because grouse were not birds that could be taken by any of the ordinary modes of sport in use when this franchise had its origin (LORD TENTERDEN, C.J.).—*DEVONSHIRE (DUKE) v. 53. Wild Cattle—Rights of crown grantee.

Her Majesty's Emigration Comrs. in the course of negotiations for grants of land to the Falkland Islands Co., with the right of hunting & taking wild cattle on the lands granted, treated all the wild cattle upon the islands as feræ naturæ, & distinctly intimated to the co. that no property in them could be acquired. In the years 1859 & 1860, grants of land were made by the Crown to that co. in fee, with a reservation to the Crown of the right of re-entry, for the purpose of making roads, canals & other works of public utility, together with a right to cut timber, & to search for & carry away stones & other materials for making or keeping such works in repair, together with all minerals & coal, & full liberty to search for & carry away same. Incidental to these grants, a licence, or lease, to depasture stock on 10,000 acres, the limits of which were strictly defined, was granted by the Crown to the co., for a term of years, at a fixed rent, subject to the same reservation as was contained in the grants of land in fee. Neither in the grants, or the licence, was any provision made as to the right to hunt & kill wild animals:—Held: (1) the grants & licence to depasture stock must be considered to have been applied for & entered into on the faith of the admission by the Crown that the wild cattle were feræ

50 i. Bees—Swarming in another's trees.—Bees in a wild state are the property of the person who can get possession of them. When they come into cultivation & swarm from a hive, they remain the property of the owner so long as he is pursuing them where he is entitled to go. If they come upon another person's land, that person is entitled to prevent pursuit on his land, & if they are hived by that person, they become his property.—HARRIS v. ELDER (1893), 57 J. e. Wild game—Damages for shooting.—A land surveyor, being on a farm for a lawful purpose, shot several head of game which were running wild, but which the owner of the property was endeavouring to preserve:—Held: no action lay for damages sustained through the shooting of wild animals neither in actual nor constructive possession of the owner of the land. Semble: an action for trespass would lie.—*WRIGHT v. 54. Animals in general—Distinctions.]—The stealing of peacocks or any reclaimed fowl is felony, so of tame herons, pigeons & young hawks in their nests, so of fishes in a private lake & ponds; it is otherwise of the pheasant, partridge, hare, coney, although they be so kept that they cannot escape, if they do not become reclaimed & be known so to be by him who steals them. 58. ——— Form of indictment—5 Geo. 3, c. 14, s. 1.]—An indictment under the above sect. charged deft. with unlawfully entering A.'s garden adjoining her dwelling-house, in which was a pond for keeping fish, & without her consent taking from the pond with a net gold & silver fish, her goods & chattels. The pond was 20 yards long by 10 yards broad, & gold & silver fish were kept in it & were usually fished for with hook & line. It was objected that the fish were feræ naturæ & not the property of anyone as alleged in the indictment. Deft. having been convicted:—Held: the allegation in the indictment that the fish were the goods & chattels of prosecutrix was surplusage, & the indictment was good, it being only for the misdemeanour under the above Act. Semble: if the indictment had been at common law for felony, it should have described what sort of pond it was, in order that it might appear on the face of the indictment that taking fish out of such a pond was felony.—R. v. 59. Pheasant—Feræ naturæ—Form of indictment.]—Prisoner was convicted on an indictment for stealing a pheasant of the goods & chattels of S.:—Held: the conviction was bad, for in cases of larceny of animals feræ naturæ the indictment must show that they were either dead, tame or confined, otherwise they must be presumed to be in their original state, & it was not sufficient to add "of the goods & chattels" of such an one.—R. v. 61. ——— "Game."]—Young pheasants which have been hatched by a hen, & have not yet become wild, while under the care & protection of the hen which hatched them, are to be considered the property of the owner of the hen & are subjects of larceny. Being his property they are not "game" within Night Poaching Act, 1828 (c. 69), for that term necessarily implies something which is not the subject of property.—R. v. The taking, killing, removing, & selling, were parts of one continuous action:—Held: a conviction of such gamekeeper for embezzlement of the rabbits could not be sustained, as it was impossible to say the rabbits had been received or taken into possession by prisoner for, or in the name of or on account of, his employer.—*R. v.  —Prisoner was employed to trap wild rabbits, & it was his duty to take them when trapped to the head keeper. Contrary to his duty he trapped from time to time rabbits, & took them to another part of the land & placed them in a bag, to which another keeper observing went & took some of the rabbits out of the bag during prisoner's absence & nicked them, & put them into the bag. His reason for nicking was that he might know them again. Prisoner afterwards took away the bag & the rabbits with the intention of appropriating them to his own use:—Held: the act of the keeper in nicking the rabbits was no reduction of them into the possession of the master, so as to make prisoner guilty of stealing them.—R. v. PETCH (1878), 38 L. T. 788; 42 J. P. 694; 14 Cox, C. C. 116, C. C. R.

Prisoner had the full charge & control of the vessel during the voyages. Whilst returning to Grimsby with a cargo of fish, which had been caught & deposited in the usual receptacle provided for that purpose in the hold of the vessel, prisoner put into Bridlington harbour for the purpose of having a new trawl-net mounted. Whilst in that harbour a boat came from the shore, & by prisoner's orders some of the fish was taken out of the hold, put into the boat & taken ashore, where it was subsequently sold by prisoner, who appropriated the proceeds:—Held: the fish had been reduced into the possession of the prosecutors before prisoner took it out of the hold, & prisoner was properly convicted of larceny.—*R. v. g. Foals of mares wrongfully detained—Foaled while in possession of person so detaining.]—In Apr., 1846, certain mares, pltf.'s property, strayed to deft.'s farm, who advertised them, & no owner appearing, he began to use them about a year afterwards. In July, 1846, the same mares, being supposed to be on pltf.'s pasture, were sold to S., who never obtained possession of them, but hearing, in 1852, that they had foaled, & were in deft.'s possession, made a written demand on deft. for them & their progeny in Sept. of that year. A year afterwards S. made over his interest to pltf., who made a demand on deft. for the mares & their colts, which was refused:—Held: the measure of damages was the value of the property at the time of the conversion, & pltf. had no claim to be the owner of the animals subsequently bred from the mares.—SCOTT v. McALPINE (1857), 6 C. P. 302.—CAN.

h. On execution.]—After a testator's death his widow, one of the trustees, remained on his farm & in possession of the stock & personal property, some of which she sold, & the stock had been added to by breeding. A writ of execution came into the sheriff's hands against her, & while it was there, the two other trustees took from her a mtge. of all the personal property for advances made by them to her. The sheriff afterwards seized under the writ, & the two trustees forbade the sale; but it went on, & one of them bought the goods, & took a bill of sale from the sheriff, against whom they then brought an action for the seizure:—Held: (1) they were not estopped from complaining of the seizure & sale as illegal by having purchased at the sale; (2) the increase of stock belonged to the owner of the stock at the time & went by the same rule.—PEERE v. CARRALL (1860), 19 U. C. R. 229.—CAN.

l. As between grantor & grantee of bill of sale.]—The holder of a bill of sale of a mare has no property in a colt foaled by her, especially where the bill the old stock were all spent, & others supplied, part by increase & part by purchase:—Held: (1) increase of stock went to the lessee, these things being severed from the principal; (2) in a lease of dead goods anything added for reparation or otherwise went to the lessor, because it belonged to the principal.—*WOOD v. The thief was convicted of stealing the cows, notice of the conviction was given to the purchaser, & the cows & calves were demanded of him on behalf of the original owner:—Held: the calves were the property of the original owner, as on the thief's conviction the property in the stolen cows reverted in the original owner.—*WALKER v. 90. As between tenant for life & remainderman.—Deer were settled on a tenant for life & remainderman. The tenant for life subsequently bought other deer:—Held: (1) the progeny of such deer were bound by the settlement equally with those of the original deer; (2) deer are not within the rule that things qua non consumuntur cannot be settled.—PAINE v. WARWICK (COUNTESS), [1914] 2 K. B. 486; sub nom. WHITE v. PAINE, 83 L. J. K. B. 895; 30 T. L. R. 347; 58 Sol. Jo. 381.

SECT. 1.—RIGHTS.

SUB-SECT. 1.—WHEN THE ANIMAL IS INTERFERED WITH, INJURED OR KILLED.

A. By Person acting in Self-defence.

91. Dog entering adjoining premises—Frightening occupiers thereof.—The plea in an action for trespass for killing pltf.'s mastiff justified the killing on the ground that to pltf.'s knowledge the dog was savage & given to biting men & cattle, that it had often been to deft.'s yard adjoining his dwelling-house barking & putting deft. & his family in fear of being bitten if they left the house, that although deft. gave pltf. notice of this, pltf. neglected to restrain the dog, & that upon the dog again coming to deft.'s premises & putting him & his family in fear as aforesaid, deft. for their safety shot the dog. After verdict for deft., upon motion in arrest of judgment:—Held: the plea was good.—KECK v. HALSTEAD (1699), 2 Lut. 1494; 125 E. R. 823.

92. Dog attacking person—Unreasonable violence in self-defence.—A party using unreasonable violence to beat off a dog which runs at him is guilty of a wilful trespass under Malicious Injuries to Property Act, 1827 (c. 30), s. 24.

Pltf., a pedlar, went to deft.'s yard to sell goods; a small dog ran out & barked at him, & pltf. struck the dog a violent blow which made it permanently blind:—Held: pltf. had wilfully injured the dog under the above sect., if the violence he had used clearly exceeded all that was necessary for his own protection & was not reasonably done in his own of sale is held merely as security for a loan & the mare has never been in his possession.—HIRSCHFIELD v. HALIFAX (CITY) (1889), 22 N. S. R. 52.—CAN.

m. —.]—Pltfs. were the grantees & H. the grantor of a bill of sale, by way of mtge., which conveyed four horses, with a proviso giving power to pltfs., on default, to take possession & dispose of the property as they should see fit. After default in payment of principal & interest, a mare, described in the mtge., dropped a foal, which was seized by the sheriff under an execution against H.:—Held: the foal having been dropped after default made &, therefore, while pltfs. were owners & entitled to possession of the mare, such foal was their property.—TEMPLE v. NICHOLSON (1881), Cass Dig. (2nd ed.) 114.—CAN.

n. As between tenants in common & purchaser from sheriff.—A. & B. became tenants in common of a mare, B. to keep & take care of the mare for a year, when A. was to have her. While in B.'s possession she was seized & sold by the sheriff under an execution against B., but notice of A.'s claim was given to the sheriff & publicly at the sale. Subsequently the mare had a colt which was in gremio at the time of the sale. In an action by A. against C., the purchaser at the sheriff's sale:—Held: the sheriff's sale passed only B.'s interest in the mare, & C. by his purchase became a co-owner with A.; & the property in the colt following that of its dam, A. was an owner of an undivided moiety in both.—GUNN v. BURGESS (1884), 5 O. R. 685.—CAN.

o. As between buyer & creditors of vendor.—Horses, having been seized in execution, were claimed by deft. as his property under a direct purchase from one of the execution debtors, or as the increase of animals so purchased:—Held: (1) as to one of the animals, said to have been in gremio of a mare when purchased, as no bill of sale was given to deft. upon the sale of the dam, & the sale was not accompanied by an immediate delivery nor followed by an actual & continued change of possession, the sale was under Bills of Sale Ordnance C. O. (1898), c. 43, s. 9, absolutely void as against pltf.; (2) as to four of the horses, the progeny of mares said to have been sold to deft. long before the progeny were conceived, the sale of the dams was absolutely void as against pltf., & no property in their increase ever became vested in deft. as against pltf.; (3) the brood of all tame & domestic animals belonged to the owner of the dam.—GRAF v. LINGERELL (1914), 27 W. L. R. 707; 7 Alta. L. R. 340; 6 W. W. R. 566; 16 D. L. R. 417.—CAN.

p. As between mortgagor & mortgagee.—Colts of mares covered by mtge. are part of "the natural increase of the goods & chattels," & as such are covered by mtge. until they no longer need the nurture of their mother; in order that the mtge. cover the increase beyond this time there must be express provision.—JOHNSON v. COLE (1914), 30 W. L. R. 290; 7 W. W. R. 593.—CAN.

93. — Plea of self-defence.]—To justify shooting another person's dog, it is not sufficient to show that the dog was of a ferocious disposition, & was at large, but the dog must be actually attacking the party at the time.

Where deft. was passing pltf.'s house, & pltf.'s dog ran out, & bit deft.'s gaiter, & on deft. turning round, & raising his gun, the dog ran away & he shot the dog as he ran away :—Held : deft. was not justified in so doing.—MORRIS v. NUGENT (1836), 7 C. & P. 572.

94. — Known ferocity of animal.]—If defts. justify shooting a dog by pleading that it attacked them, & that it "was accustomed to attack & bite mankind," pltf. may call witnesses to prove the general quietness of the dog.—CLARK v. WEBSTER (1823), 1 C. & P. 104.

B. By Person acting in Defence of his own Animal.

95. Dog killed—Chasing rabbits in warren.]—A warrener may justify killing a mastiff dog in the warren to prevent his destroying the conies.—WADHURST v. DAMME (1604), Cro. Jac. 45; 79 E. R. 37.

96. While attacking another dog.]—In an action of trespass for killing a mastiff-dog, deft. pleaded pltf. suffered the dog to go unmuzzled, & that he fell on a dog kept by deft. for preservation of the house, & deft., to preserve his dog, killed pltf.'s dog :—Held : (1) (TWISDEN & WINDHAM, JJ.) the plea was ill, without saying that he could not otherwise save his dog; (2) (KEELING & MORETON, JJ.) the plea was sufficient.—WRIGHT v. RAMSCOT (RAINSCAR) (1667), 1 Saund. 84; 1 Sid. 336; 85 E. R. 93; sub nom. WRIGHT v. WRANSCOT (WRANSCOTT), 2 Keb. 237; 1 Lev. 216.

97. — While attacking hogs.]—Deft. may justify killing pltf.'s mastiffs to prevent them from killing deft.'s hogs, although the hogs were trespassing.—KING v. ROSE (1673), 1 Freem. K. B. 347; 3 Keb. 228; 89 E. R. 258.

98. — Chasing deer in park.]—A deer having escaped from a park & being in pltf.'s land, he chased it with his dogs, who pursued & killed it in the park :—Held : the park owner might kill the dogs.—BARRINGTON v. TURNER (1681), 3 Lev. 28; 83 E. R. 560.

Annotation :—Refd. Protheroe v. Mathews (1833), 5 C. & P. 581.

99. —.]—The servant of a park owner may shoot a dog chasing deer therein, though such shooting be not absolutely necessary for the deer's preservation, & the dog was not actually pursuing when so shot, if the chasing & the shooting were all one transaction.—PROTHEROE v. MATHEWS (1833), 5 C. & P. 581.

100. — When attacking fowls.]—If deft. justifies shooting a dog, because the dog was worrying his fowl, & could not otherwise be prevented, he must prove that the dog was in the act of worrying the fowl at the very moment he shot it.—JANSON v. BROWN (1807), 1 Camp. 41.

101. — Chasing hares in close.]—A plea to an action of trespass for killing pltf.'s dog cannot justify the act by stating that the lord of the manor was possessed of a close, & that deft., as his gamekeeper, killed the dog when running after hares in that close for the preservation of the hares, such plea not even stating that it was necessary to kill the dog for the preservation of the hares, nor that it was the dog of an unqualified person.—VERE v. CAWDOR (LORD) (1809), 11 East, 568; 103 E. R. 1125.

102. —.]—Pltf.'s dogs passed through a gap in a hedge on to deft.'s land, & were shot by him. There was no evidence that the dogs were coursing a hare :—Held : the only question for the jury was the amount of damages.—MOORE v. CLARKE (1898), 62 J. P. 522.

103. — When chasing sheep.]—The owner of sheep in a field which had been worried by a dog shot the dog when in another field at some distance off. In an action by the owner of the dog :—Held : deft. was not justified in the act of shooting as it was not done in protection of his property.—WELLS v. HEAD (1831), 4 C. & P. 568; 2 Man. & Ry. M. C. 517.

C. By Person acting in Defence of Property.

104. Cattle chased off land—By stranger.]—If a man see the beasts of his neighbour in another's land into a farmer's wheat field, & his servants having chased them out by driving them across a fence which divided the two farms, & one of them having, in leaping, fallen on a stake & been killed :—Held : the servant was not liable, there being no appearance of intention to injure the horses, & the injury being accidental.—HERRIOT v. UNTHANK (1827), 6 S. 211.—SCOT.

w. —.]—A horse broke out of a field & entered, in pursuit of some mares, the farm-close of a neighbouring farm. A servant on the farm having beaten him with a stake in order to drive him away, & the horse having thereafter died from a wound alleged to have been inflicted by a nail in the stake :—Held : the servant was not liable for the price of the horse.

When a party's horses or cattle break in among the crop or stock of a neighbour, the servants of the latter are entitled & bound to use ordinary & reasonable compulsion to drive them away; & if any accident happen to the animals trespassing from the means used, it is a casualty which their owner must take upon himself.—CUMMING v. TURNBULL (1840), 2 D. 579.—SCOT.

104 i. Cattle chased off land.]—Deft. set his dog on pltf.'s cows, which were

. 1, SUB-SECT. B.

96 i. Dog killed—While attacking horse.]—While deft. was driving along the public highway in his carriage pltf.'s dog barked & jumped at the horse, which was a nervous animal & became greatly excited in consequence of the actions of the dog. A short distance ahead was a steep hill with a narrow road to descend. Deft., fearing that the horse would get beyond his control, & that an accident would follow, shot the dog :—Held : he was justified in so doing.—QUIGLEY v. PUDSEY (1894), 26 N. S. R. 240.—CAN.

103 i. — When chasing sheep.]—In trespass for shooting a dog, deft. justified that the dog was used to worry sheep, etc., that being so used, just before he was shot by deft., he was worrying deft.'s sheep. General demurrer, the causes of demurrer assigned being that the plea did not disclose a legal justification, as it should have averred that the dog was in the act of worrying, & not that he was worrying "just before" the time, etc. :—Held : (1) an averment that the dog was about to renew the attack would be a legal justification, & the averments in the pleas amounted to that; (2) the pleading was sufficient on general demurrer.—KELLETT v. STANNARD (1850), 2 I. C. L. R. 156; 4 Ir. Jur. O. S. 50.—IR.

s. Horse killed—When attacking mare—Unnecessary violence.]—Resp. was the owner of a stallion running on terms on the land of applt. & under applt.'s charge in an enclosed paddock. A servant of applt. went to repair a fence of the paddock in which the stallion was running. He rode a mare belonging to his master to the place, & tied her up to the fence inside the paddock, & went to work. Afterwards he heard the stallion squealing at the mare, & found the mare in the ditch of the fence, & the horse biting her neck. Having a spade in his hand, he threw it at the horse, inflicting an injury so severe that the animal had to be destroyed :—Held : in protecting his master's property applt.'s servant had proceeded with unnecessary violence amounting to a criminal act, being an excess for which, nevertheless, the master was responsible.—HUNTER v. McRAE (1897), 15 N. Z. L. R. 701.—N.Z.

t. Horse chased off land—By servant of owner of land.]—Several horses from a neighbouring farm having broken damage feasant, it is not lawful for him to drive them off, & if he do, the owner shall have trespass, although he did a good act, & saved the owner from damages for the depasturing of his beasts.—MALEVERER v. SPINKE (1537), 1 Dyer. 35b; 73 E. R. 79.

105. By owner of land.—T. was seised of a right of common in lands belonging to A. & in lands belonging to B. B. purchased the lands & demised them to pltf., who put cattle for pasture into A.'s lands from whence they were driven out by deft., A.'s tenant, with a dog:—Held: (1) the right of common was a right of common appurtenant, & extinguished by the unity of ownership; (2) A. could enclose his lands against B. & his tenant, & the act of the latter was a trespass; (3) when pltf.'s cattle trespassed on deft.'s land, he might chase them out with a dog, without being compelled to distrain them.

In the case of persons entitled to common by vicinage one may enclose against the other, for he who has such common cannot put his cattle into the lands of the other, but he ought to put them in the land where he has common; & if they stray into the other land, the trespass is excused by reason of the ancient usage.—TYRRINGHAM'S CASE (1584), 4 Co. 106. Ewes in lamb chased off another's land—By owner of land.—In trespass for chasing ewes being great with lambs, so as by such driving pltf. lost his lambs, deft. pleaded they were in his several damage feasant, wherefore he took them & drove them to the pound:—Held: this was no plea, for although he might take, yet he could not drive them with peril, etc.—ANON. (1572), 3 Leon. 15; 74 E. R. 511.

107. Rabbits killed on another's land—By owner of land.—Where a man makes coney-burrows in his own lands, & the conies go on to other lands & do damage, the conies, being feræ naturæ, may be killed by the person upon whose land they go.—BOULSTON'S CASE (1597), 5 Co. 108. Rabbits killed damage feasant—By commoner.—In trespass for breaking his close & killing conies deft. pleaded he had common time out of mind, & the conies were damage feasant in the place where he killed them:—Held: (1) conies were beasts of warren & profitable as deer, & were not to be compared to foxes & vermin which might be killed, but the owner of the soil might keep conies where the common was as well as other cattle, & might make fish-ponds which the commoner could not destroy; (2) judgment must be given for pltf.—PELLING v. LANGDEN (1601), Owen, 114; 74 E. R. 940.

109. Sheep chased off land—Pursued into adjoining land.—In an action of trespass for chasing sheep, it appeared they were trespassing upon certain land, & deft. with a dog chased them out, & as soon as the sheep were out of the land he called in his dog, but the dog pursued the sheep into another man's land next adjoining:—Held: trespass did not lie, as it was lawful for deft. to chase the sheep out of his own land, & he did his best endeavour to recall the dog.—MITTEN v. FAUDRYE (1626), Poph. 161; sub nom. MILLEN (MILLER) v. FAWEN (FAWTREY, FAWDRY, HAWERY), Benl. 171; W. Jo. 131; Lat. 13, 119.

110. Swine killed on another's land—When trespassing.—In an action for keeping a mastiff, deft. knowing that it was used to bite swine & that the mastiff bit & killed pltf.'s sow, it was moved in arrest of judgment that it was proper for a dog to hunt hogs out of ground:—Held: (1) it was not lawful to keep dogs to bite & kill swine; (2) judgment must be for pltf.—BOULTON v. BANKS (1632), Cro. Car. 254; 79 E. R. 822.

Annotation:—Refd. Mason v. Keeling (1699), 12 Mod. Rep. 332.

111. Sheep killed on another's land—Worried while being chased off same.—Pltf.'s sheep were trespassing on deft.'s field which adjoined pltf.'s land, & while the sheep were being driven by their owner back to his own field, deft.'s dog, which was in the field where the sheep were so trespassing, worried & killed one of the sheep. Deft. had several times warned pltf. to prevent his sheep from trespassing on his land:—Held: under Dogs Act, 1865 (c. 60), s. 1, the owner of the dog was liable for the injury done by his dog to the sheep, although such sheep was trespassing on his land at the time when the injury was inflicted.—GRANGE v. SILCOCK (1897), 77 L. T. 340; 61 J. P. 709; 46 W. R. 221; 13 T. L. R. 565; 41 Sol. Jo. 697.

112. Dog killed—Notice that trespassing dogs will be shot.—In an action of trespass for shooting pltf.'s dog, the defence was that deft. had put up a notice that dogs trespassing would be shot:—Held: a man was not at liberty to shoot another's dog by virtue of such a notice.—CORNER v. CHAMPNEYS (1814), cited 2 Marsh. at p. 584.

113. —Setting dog-spear—Notice.—Deft. was owner & occupier of a wood adjoining a wood of B., divided therefrom by a low bank & a shallow ditch, not being a sufficient fence to prevent dogs from passing from B.'s wood into deft.'s wood. There were public footpaths through deft.'s wood, not fenced off therefrom. Deft., to preserve hares in his wood, & to prevent them from being killed trespassing. In running away, one of the cows broke her leg:—Held: the questions for the judge to consider were: "Was what was done by deft. in setting the dog on the cows reasonably necessary in the circumstances of the case, & was this the cause of the injury."—MURRAY v. MUIR (1915), 8 O. W. N. 222.—CAN.

109 i. Sheep chased off land.—Pltf.'s sheep strayed into the field of deft.'s employer, & deft. chased them out of the field & in so doing his dog injured one sheep so that it had to be killed. The dog used was not a fierce dog & had been used by deft. before in driving pltf.'s sheep out of the same field, & no harm resulted:—Held: pltf.'s action to recover for the sheep lost must be dismissed.—CARMICHAEL v. FELTOE (1908), 9 W. L. R. 15.—CAN.

112 i. Dog killed—By farmer.—Where a farmer had shot his neighbour's dog for trespassing on his property:—Held: he had no right to take the law into his own hands & must pay damages.—TRENHOLME v. MILLS (1881), 4 L. N. 79.—CAN.

therein by dogs & foxes that came thereinto in pursuit of hares, kept iron spikes screwed & fastened into several trees in his wood, each spike having two sharp ends, & so placed that each end should point along the course of a hare-path, & purposely placed at such a height from the ground, as to allow a hare to pass under them without injury, but to wound & kill a dog, that might happen to run against one of the sharp ends thereof, the spikes being, from their nature & positions, adapted to effect the purpose for which deft. fastened them there; none of them was at a less distance than 50 yards from any footpath, & some were from 150 to 160 yards distant therefrom. Deft. kept notices painted on boards placed at the outside of some parts of the wood that steel-traps, spring-guns, & dog-spikes were set in that wood for vermin. Pltf., with B.'s permission, was sporting in his wood with a valuable pointer; a hare rose in his wood & was pursued by the dog thereout, over the bank & ditch, into deft.'s wood, & in the pursuit, there ran against one of the sharp spikes, & was killed. Pltf. endeavoured as much as in him lay to prevent his dog from pursuing the hare into deft.'s wood, but was unable so to do. Pltf. having brought an action against deft. to recover compensation for the loss of his dog:—Held: (1) (GIBBS, C.J., & DALLAS, J.) the action was not maintainable; (2) (PARK & BURROUGH, JJ.) pltf. was entitled to recover.—DEANE v. CLAYTON (1817), 7 Taunt. 489; 1 Moore, C. P. 203; 2 Marsh. 577; 129 E. R. 196.

115. —“Unlawful dog” on Crown lands.—Crown Lands Act, 1825 (c. 17), s. 14.—If there be evidence that a dog is brought into the Forest of Dean for the purpose of taking or destroying deer, etc., the dog is an “unlawful dog” within the above sect., & if not delivered up may be shot by the gamekeeper whilst going along a public highway which passes through the forest.—DAVIS v. GIRDER (1846), 7 L. T. O. S. 63; 10 J. P. Jo. 261.

116. —Shot without intention to kill.—A gamekeeper fired at a dog near an aviary, wherein were his master's pheasants, & killed it. The justices found as a fact that he fired with the intention of driving it away & not of killing it, & that he thought it necessary to fire for the protection of his master's property:—Held: if the gamekeeper bona fide believed that what he did was necessary for the protection of his master's property, he was not guilty.—*MILES v. S. had previously warned W. that unless the fowls were kept off he should kill them:—Held: S. could not be convicted under Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (c. 97), s. 41, of unlawfully killing the fowls.—*SMITH v. 119. —Eating crops on another's land—Larceny Act, 1861 (c. 96), s. 23.—House pigeons kept by A. were in the habit in the day-time of flying over & feeding upon the land of B. He served notice on A., requesting that he would immediately cause them to be destroyed or prevent them from doing further injury to his crops; if not, he would be compelled in self-defence to shoot or otherwise to destroy them, besides claiming damages for the injury he sustained from their feeding on his land. After this B. found them feeding on his land & fired at them & thereby caused them to rise; he then fired at them a second time, & killed one, which he left on the ground:—Held: he had not unlawfully killed it within the above sect.—TAYLOR v. NEWMAN (1863), 4 B. & S. 89; 2 New Rep. 275; 32 L. J. M. C. 186; 8 L. T. 424; 27 J. P. 502; 11 W. R. 752; 9 Cox, C. C. 314; 122 E. R. 393.

x. Shooting cat—Measure of damages.—Pltf.'s cat was in the habit of wandering from pltf.'s land, but returned every evening. The cat while off pltf.'s land was intentionally shot at & killed by deft., a gamekeeper, for the protection of his master's game:—

Held: pltf. was entitled to recover damages for the loss of the cat, & the shooting being intentional, the damages should exceed the mere value of the cat.—WHITTINGHAM v. IDESON (1862), 8 U. C. L. J. 14.—CAN.

122. Poisoning fowls.]—In an action of trespass it was proved that deft. had thrown poisoned barley upon both pltf.'s premises & his own in order to poison pltf.'s poultry, & that some of pltf.'s fowls had died in consequence:—Held: the jury were not confined as to damages to the mere amount of injury sustained, but might consider the intention with which deft.'s act was done, whether for insult or injury.—SEARS v. LYONS (1818), 2 Stark. 317.

123. Poisoning dog—Rat poison in shop.]—Deft., a confectioner, had a shop in which there was a counter of the ordinary kind running from one side of the shop to the other, from behind which counter the customers were served by deft. & his assistants, the space behind the counter being used exclusively by the latter for that purpose, the space in front of it being the part of the shop reserved for the accommodation of the customers. The counter was hollow underneath & open on the inside of it, & the outer side of it towards the shop was boarded up, from the floor to the level of the top where the confectionery was placed, from one side of the shop to the other, except a space of about 5 feet wide at the end farthest from the door of the shop. In the space beneath the counter, & inside the boarding which separated it from the outer part of the shop, deft. placed some bread & cheese covered with poison for the purpose of destroying rats & mice. Pltf.'s daughter & her governess went to the shop to make some purchases, accompanied by a dog of pltf., which, it appeared, had on previous occasions been with them in the shop, though there was no proof that deft. or his assistants ever saw the dog there. While they were waiting in the shop to be served the dog, on the day in question, passed through the opening at the end of the counter, & getting behind & underneath the counter, ate a portion of the poisoned bread & cheese & was thereby killed:—Held: deft. was not liable in an action at pltf.'s suit for damages for the loss of the dog. Deft. had a right to put the poison where he did for the purpose of destroying the rats & mice, & in doing it he did a lawful thing for a lawful purpose, nor was he bound to give notice of its being there to his customers. The dog had no business to be behind the counter: & without saying it had no right to be in the shop, yet, if pltf. or his servants chose to take it in with them, they were bound to look after it & prevent it from getting into mischief.—STANSFELD v. BOLLING (1870), 22 L. T. 799; 34 J. P. 406.

124 i. Poisoning dog—Poisoned flesh on land.]—Deft., in order to prevent dogs worrying his cattle, several of which had been killed, poisoned his lands by placing pieces of meat saturated with poison thereon. Pltf.'s dog, which was accustomed to go upon deft.'s land adjoining the lands of pltf., was poisoned. Deft. had previously been fined for not having complied with the provisions of Poisoned Flesh Prohibition Act, 1864 (c. 115):—Held: pltf. was entitled to recover damages for the loss of the dog, a conviction under the above Act not being a bar to an action for damages.—LAWLER v. M'KENNA (1905), 39 I. L. T. 159.—

Applt. gave resp. notice to keep his dog out of the garden, & that he should place poisoned flesh there which would kill the dog. He did place poisoned flesh there, & the dog ate it & so was killed:—Held: applt. was not guilty of unlawfully & maliciously killing the dog within Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (c. 97), s. 41. Seem: he was liable to be convicted summarily under Poisoned Flesh Prohibition Act, 1864 (c. 115), s. 2.—*DANIEL v. A cat belonging to a neighbour ate some of the meat so placed & died:—Held: resp. had placed the poisoned meat "in or upon land" within Poisoned Flesh Prohibition Act, 1864 (c. 115), s. 2, & the case did not come within the exceptions in s. 3 of that Act as to occupiers placing poisoned flesh in buildings or enclosed gardens for the destruction of small vermin.—*ROGERS v. 129. ———.]—Deft. was the occupier of a close adjoining a close occupied by pltf. Deft.'s close was woodland, & he sold the fallage of the timber to H., continuing himself to occupy the close. H. felled a tree in a negligent manner, so that it fell over the fence between the two closes, & made a gap in it. Two cows of pltf. soon afterwards got from pltf.'s close through the gap into deft.'s close, & fed on the leaves of a yew tree which had been felled there by H., & died in consequence. Deft. had had no notice of the fence having been broken down before the escape of pltf.'s cows. There was evidence that deft. & his predecessors had for more than forty years repaired the fence (which was on his land) between the two closes whenever repairs were necessary, & that, for the last nineteen years, the fence had been repaired by deft. & his predecessors upon notice by the occupier for the time being of pltf.'s close. Whenever the fence was so repaired, it was for the purpose of preventing cattle on pltf.'s close from escaping into deft.'s close:—Held: (1) the evidence showed a prescriptive obligation on the part of deft. to maintain the fence so as to keep in the cattle in pltf.'s close; (2) the obligation was absolute to keep up a sufficient fence at all times, the act of God or vis major only excepted, without any notice of want of repair; (3) the damage was not too remote, & deft. was liable to pltf. for the loss of the cows.—*LAWRENCE v. 130. ———.]—Pltf. & defts. respectively occupied adjoining lands as tenants under the same landlord. By the terms of their lease defts. were bound to fence the land in their occupation for the benefit of the lessor & his tenants. About twenty years ago the predecessors of defts. had fenced their land with wire rope, & defts. allowed this fence to remain, & from time to time partially repaired it. From long exposure the strands of the wires composing the rope decayed, & pieces of it fell to the ground & lay hidden in the grass of the adjoining pasture occupied by pltf. Pltf.'s cow grazing there swallowed one of these pieces & died in consequence:—Held: defts. were liable to compensate pltf. for the loss of the cow.—FIRTH v. BOWLING IRON Co. (1878), 3 O. P. The horse, owing to the bad state of the fence, fell from one field into the other, & was killed:—Held: B., though a gratuitous bailee, might maintain an action against C. & recover the value of the horse.—*ROOTH v. 133. ——— Mine owner—Open shaft.]—A person entitled to the minerals under the land of another, with licence to make a mine shaft opening into it, is, in the absence of any stipulation to the contrary, under a legal obligation to the owner of the surface soil to fence the shaft so as to prevent its being a source of danger to his cattle which may be upon it: & he is liable to an action for injury accruing to those cattle for want of such fencing.—*WILLIAMS v. 132 i. ——— Straying animal falling in open drain in street.]—In a portion of a street, which was a cul de sac & was not much used for traffic, a municipal authority constructed an open drain. Pltf.'s horse having escaped from a paddock, wandered into this street, entered the drain at its shallow end, walked up it to the deepest part, & not being able to turn round, injured itself in its efforts to extricate itself, & died soon after being extricated. The deepest part of the drain was protected to a certain extent by fences, but the lower end was not fenced across. In an action to recover damages:—Held: the municipal authority was not shown to have been guilty of any breach of duty, & even if it were the injury complained of did not arise in consequence of such breach.—BENALLA (SHIRE PRESIDENT) v. CHERRY (1911), 12 C. L. R. 642.—AUS.

132 ii. ——— Straying animal falling in open well.]—A municipal bye-law provided that it should not be lawful to allow any animal, excepting dogs only, to run at large at any time of the year within the limits of the municipality. Pltf.'s horse strayed upon deft.'s land, where the latter maintained an open well:—Held: (1) under the bye-law, pltf. was guilty of negligence in allowing his horse to run at large; (2) as pltf., knowing of the well & the danger to animals, allowed his horse to stray, in direct violation of the bye-law, deft. not liable, although owing a duty under Open Wells Act, N. S. Sask. (c. 124), s. 2, towards straying or trespassing animals.—BALDREY v. FENTON (1914), 29 W. L. R. 258; 6 W. W. R. 1441; 20 D. L. R. 677.—CAN.

The hole had formerly been fenced, but shortly before the accident a portion of the fence had disappeared:—Held: in the absence of proof that portion of the fence had been removed by the owner, & that such removal had been the proximate cause of the accident, pltf. had failed to establish that the accident was due to deft.'s negligence & could not succeed.—SKINNER v. JOHANNESBURG TURF CLUB (1907), T. S. 852.—S. AF.

133 ii. ——— Trustee of club—Open well.]—Deft. held land as bare trustee for a club, which let the land to C., who entered into an arrangement to pasture pltf.'s horses upon the land. One of the horses fell into an uncovered well upon the land & died:—Held: deft. owed no duty to C. or pltf., & was not responsible for pltf.'s loss either at common law or under a municipal bye-law requiring wells to be kept covered.—*LOVE v. Pltfs. attended the market with their cattle, & occupied a particular site, for which they paid a toll. A cow belonging to them, in attempting to jump the railing, injured herself, & subsequently died from the injuries. The jury found that the railing was dangerous:—Held: defts. having received toll from pltfs. & invited them to come to the market with their cattle, a duty was imposed on them to keep the market in a safe condition, & an action would lie against defts. for the loss sustained by pltfs.—*LAX v. Exposure of horses to cold—Breach of contract for stabling.—Deft., an innkeeper, contracted with pltf., a horsedealer, to provide him with stabling for a number of horses during a fair at which they were to be sold, but in consequence of deft., in breach of such contract, having let his stables to another person, pltf.'s horses, after they had been put into deft.'s stables on their arrival there from a railway journey, were turned out by that person, frightened from some cause unexplained, dashed into a barbed wire fence placed by defts. along their railway line:—Held: defts. not liable, the test being whether the fence was dangerous to ordinary stock under ordinary conditions, & not whether it was dangerous to a bolting horse.—PLATH & BALLARD v. GRAND FORKS & KETTLE RIVER RY. CO. (1904), 10 B. C. R. 299.—CAN.

z. — Animal "at large."—A mare, allowed to run at large by her owner, strayed on to lands of deft. & was killed by coming into contact with a strand of barbed wire stretched about deft.'s property:—Held: pltf. could not recover damages from deft.—MCLEAN v. RUDD (1908), 1 Alta. L. R. 505; 9 W. L. R. 283.—CAN.

a. Removal of fencing—By local authority.—Pltf. having obstructed a road by locking a gate in a fence across the road where it entered his land, the municipality in whose district the land was removed the fence & gate. Before removing the fence & gate the municipality had threatened to enforce penalties against pltf. for obstructing the road. Pltf. did not replace the fence for a considerable period, during which cattle of pltf. strayed through the gap & were lost:—Held: the loss of the cattle was a reasonable consequence of the unlawful act of the municipality, for which damages might be recovered.—NARRACAN (SHIRE PRESIDENT, ETC.) v. LEVISON (1906), 3 C. L. R. 846.—AUS.

b. Dangerous rail in street—Duty of street railway company.—The charter of a street railway co. required the road between, & for two feet outside of, the rails to be kept constantly in good repair & level with the rails. A horse crossing the track stepped on a grooved rail, & the caulk of his shoe caught in the groove, whereby he was injured. The rail was above the level of the roadway:—Held: the rail being a street obstruction unauthorised by stat. & a nuisance, the co. were liable.—HALIFAX STREET RY. CO. v. JOYCE (1893), 22 S. C. R. 258.—CAN.

137 i. MONTREAL ST. R. R. CO.* (1887), 11 L. N. 2.—CAN.

136. Dog allowed to catch chill—Construction of contract as to liability.—Pltf. placed a dog in a dogs' home belonging to defts. on the terms of a document, which stated that "every possible care & attention is given to animals," & that defts. "wish it clearly to be understood that they will not be responsible for . . . loss from . . . illness or death of any animal from whatever cause arising." The dog took a chill & was removed to another home, & it afterwards caught pneumonia & distemper, & died. In an action for negligence:—Held: under the above document the intention was that defts. should not be subject to any legal responsibility, & pltf. could not recover.—BARTON v. RUISLIP DOG SANATORIUM, LTD. (1917), 33 T. L. R. 458.

137. Train driven negligently—Bull on line killed.—In an action for damages for killing pltf.'s bull evidence was given that the bull, when being driven by pltf.'s servants, strayed into the yard, & thence through a fence on to the railway, where it was killed. The jury found that the fence between the yard & railway was sufficient for ordinary purposes, & that there was negligence on pltf.'s part in driving the bull, whereupon the judge directed a verdict to be entered for defts. with leave to move to enter it for pltf. On motion for a rule to show cause why

& resp.'s horses, which were on the line, were visible at a considerable distance. Applts.' train was provided with ordinary brakes, but not with "Westinghouse brakes," which would have stopped the train promptly. The horses were killed:—Held: the primary cause of the accident being on the facts the negligence of resp.'s employee, & the train being sufficiently provided with brakes, applts. were not liable.—*CIE. 137 viii. — — — — — By slackening speed.—Where horses escaped upon a railway track through a gate at a farm crossing, which the owner had left open, but, although they were seen by the engine driver, the speed was not slackened, & no precaution taken except sounding the whistle:—Held: the co. were liable.—CAMPBELL v. GREAT WESTERN RY. CO. (1857), 15 U. C. R. 498.—CAN.

137 ix. — — — — ——By the negligence of pltf.'s servants, his horses escaped upon defts.' line near a bridge on the track. While being driven back a train approached, which drew up for a time, & then the track being clear the engine driver sounded the whistle, & proceeded. The horses, alarmed by the whistle & motion of the train, ran towards & got on the bridge, & were killed or injured. There was ample space on each side of the track by which the horses might have passed. There was judgment should not be entered for pltf. upon the grounds (inter alia) that defts. were liable for their servant's negligence in not driving the train in such manner as to avoid an accident, the ct. granted a rule nisi.—GOODE v. SOUTH WALES RY. CO. (1859), 23 J. P. Jo. 724.

138. Railroad trucks negligently handled—Herd of cattle broken—Some eventually killed on railway.]—A herd of pltf.'s beasts were being driven at 11 o'clock p.m. along an occupation road to some fields. The road crossed a siding of defts.' railway on a level, & while the cattle were crossing the siding defts.' servants negligently sent some trucks down an incline into the siding, which divided the cattle into two lots, & frightened them, & they rushed away with the drovers after them. The drovers succeeded in recovering most of the cattle, but they were unable to recover six of them, which were ultimately found at between 3.0 & 4.0 a.m. lying dead or dying on another part of the railway, & it appeared that they had gone along the occupation road up to a garden & orchard about a quarter of a mile from the level crossing, had got into the garden through defect in the fences, & so on to the line. There was no evidence as to when the train which ran over the cattle had passed:—Held: it being admitted that defts. had been guilty of negli-

no evidence that the engine driver had acted recklessly or wantonly in proceeding with the train:—Held: defts. not liable.—HURD v. GRAND TRUNK RY. CO. (1888), 15 A. R. 58.—CAN.

137 x. ———.]—When the employees in charge of the trains of a railway co. discover animals upon the track, they are bound to exercise proper care & prudence to prevent injury to them, & a mere slackening of speed will not be considered sufficient to relieve them from responsibility.—PONTIAC PACIFIC JUNCTION RY. CO. & BRADY (1888), 4 M. L. R. 346.—CAN.

137 xi. ———.]—Pltf.'s horses through his negligence got on the track & were killed by a train:—Held: assuming the engine-driver & crew of the train which frightened the horses saw them on the track, there was no duty cast upon the engine-driver & crew to stop the train & drive the horses from the track. Semble: even if there had been such a duty, the breach of it would impose only a common law liability, which could not be given effect to.—SPORLE v. GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RY. CO. (1914), 28 W. L. R. 271; 17 D. L. R. 367; 7 Alta. L. R. 84; 6 W. W. R. 827; 17 Can. Ry. Cas. 71.—CAN.

137 xii. ——— By keeping look-out.]—A railway is not under any obligation to keep a look-out for trespassers on its tracks, & to enable a party to recover damages for loss of a horse killed by a street car, negligence must be proved to have existed after the presence of the horse was discovered.—BONDY v. SANDWICH, WINDSOR & AMHERSTBURG RY. CO. (1911), 19 O. W. R. 860; 2 O. W. N. 1476.—CAN.

c. Animal negligently tied up—By innkeeper.]—Pltf.'s horse was put up at deft.'s inn, & was strangled in the stable there, owing to the negligence of deft.'s servant in tying it up in the stall:—Held: pltf. might maintain an action therefor.—WALKER v. SHARPE (1871), 31 U. C. R. 340.—CAN.

d. ——— Question for jury.]—Deft., having charge of pltf.'s colt, took it to a blacksmith's shop to be shod for the first time, & having tied it there went out. The colt, pulling back, threw itself & received injuries, from which it died. Pltf. sued deft. for negligence in so tying the colt instead of having it held while being shod. The evidence as to whether defts.' action was proper or not was conflicting:—Held: not a case in which there should be a nonsuit, but the question was for the jury.—HENDERSON v. BARNES (1871), 32 U. C. R. 176.—CAN.

e. Defective stabling of licensee — Implied warranty of safety.]—By arrangement pltf.'s horses were stabled in a stable belonging to defts., who charged pltf. 50 cents per day per head for the stabling & feed of the horses. Pltf.'s men attended to & fed them, but there was no one on behalf of pltf. in charge of the horses at night. One of the horses broke through the flooring of the stall it occupied & died:—Held: (1) the relationship between the parties was that of licensor & licensee, & defts. impliedly warranted that the stable was reasonably fit & safe for the purpose;

(2) the floor was not in a reasonably safe condition, & defts. were liable; (3) although pltf.'s men noticed & reported defects in the stable floor, pltf. should not be fixed with knowledge of its condition & should not be taken to have assented to the risk.—GUNN v. CANADIAN PACIFIC RY. CO. (1912), 20 W. L. R. 219; 1 D. L. R. 232; 1 W. W. R. 804; 22 Man. L. R. 32.—CAN.

Negligence of farrier — Defective flooring — Contributory negligence.]—Where a horse received an injury while being shod by a farrier, & the accident was caused by the groom, who accompanied the animal, striking him with a whip, the farrier was relieved from liability, notwithstanding the unsafe condition of the floor of the smithy, but for which no damage to the horse would have resulted.—ALLAN v. MULLIN (1881), 4 L. N. 387.—CAN.

g. ——— In returning horse — Treatment.]—A blacksmith, who after having shod a horse sent it to its owner's under the care of a young boy & without bit or bridle:—Held: responsible (1) for an accident that happened to the horse through the negligence of his conductor, & (2) for negligence in that, without having consulted the owner, he had the horse attended to by an ignorant person, whose treatment rendered the horse unfit for all work.—MCGUIRE v. GRANT (1892), Q. R. 2 S. C. 267.—CAN.

h. Wheat left unattended near way—Animal overeating.]—Deft., for his own convenience, left upon a highway a wagon containing wheat in bags, which he covered over with a tarpaulin. Horses, the property of pltf., strayed from an adjoining paddock, belonging to pltf., ate some of the wheat & as the result died or were injured:—Held: (1) in so leaving his wheat upon the highway, deft. committed a public nuisance, for which pltf. could maintain an action in respect of the injury he had sustained; (2) pltf. having no duty towards deft. to prevent his horses from straying had not been guilty of contributory negligence so as to bar his claim.—MCINTYRE v. HAMS (1911), S. A. L. R. 16.—AUS.

k. ———.]—Deft. left a wagon loaded with bags of wheat, unattended & unprotected except by a dog, on the side of a country road. Pltf.'s horses were by his direction turned out on to the road to find their way unattended, as they were accustomed to do, to a paddock seven miles away. The horses tore open some of the bags & ate so much of the wheat that some of them died & others were injured. In an action based on public nuisance & on negligence, the trial judge found that wheat was so strong an allurements for horses that they would break through anything possible of being broken through to get at it, & that it was customary in country districts to leave wagon-loads of wheat on the roadside unprotected, & he gave judgment for pltf.:—Held: defts. entitled to judgment.—HANNOW v. MCLARTY (1914), 18 C. L. R. 575.—AUS.

m. Vehicle driven negligently—Running over sheep unattended on highway.]—Pltf.'s sheep, to the number of about half a dozen, were upon the public road without any one in charge of them. Deft. driving a car at a slow pace, & on his right side, ran over one of pltf.'s sheep & killed it:—Held: he was not liable.—MURPHY v. KELLER (1896), I. L. T. Jo. 205.—IR.

n. ——— Running over dog using highway.]—In an action of damages for negligence on the part of defts.' driver, who had run over pltf.'s dog while it was making stool by the side of the road close to pltf., pltf. admitted that he could not allege that the driver saw the dog, but he alleged that the driver failed to keep a proper look-out & that, if he had kept a proper look-out, he would have seen the dog in time to avoid the accident. Defts. contended that the above user of the road by the dog was unlawful & that, as the dog was not using the road as a means of passage at the time, they were not liable:—Held: action maintainable.—GRAHAM v. EDINBURGH & DISTRICT TRAM CO., LTD., [1917] S. C. 7; 54 Sc. L. R. 42; 2 S. L. T. 195.—SCOT.

o. ——— Frightening horse left unattended.]—Pltf.'s milk sleigh was standing at the side of the street when a sleigh loaded with iron came along, the rattle of which frightened pltf.'s horse so that it ran away & did a great deal of damage:—Held: there was no fault on the part of deft., & if pltf.'s horse was so easily frightened, it should have been looked after.—MCWILLIE & GOUDRON (1885), 30 L. p. ——— Straying colt running upon reaping machine.]—A reaping machine was being driven by deft. along the highway, the knife to the right side of the road, & pltf.'s colt, which was straying upon the road, ran upon the machine, notwithstanding deft.'s efforts to keep it off:—Held: pltf. not entitled to recover.—*CARR v. gence which caused the drovers to lose control over the cattle, & it being also admitted that pltf.'s men had done all they could to recover control over the beasts & had not been able so to do before they were killed, their death was the consequence of defts.' negligence, & the damage was not too remote.—SNIESBY v. LANCASHIRE & YORKSHIRE RY. CO. (1875), 1 Q. B. D. 42; 45 L. J. Q. B. 1; 33 L. T. 372; 40 J. P. 36; 24 W. R. 99, C. A.

139. Dangerous slope in railway yard—Contributory negligence.—The duty of a railway co. towards persons resorting to their stations & yards in the ordinary course of business is not higher than that of the occupier of private premises towards invitees resorting to such premises in the ordinary course of business, as laid down in Indermaur v. Dames (1866), L. R. 1 C. P. 274; affd. (1867), L. R. 2 C. P. 311. The duty of the railway co. in such a case may be stated to be a duty to take reasonable care that their premises are reasonably safe for persons using them in the ordinary & customary manner & with reasonable care.

A railway co. occupied a station yard with an approach thereto. Pltf. was in the habit of going himself or sending his driver to the station yard with a horse & cart to receive or deliver goods. The yard was bounded on one side by a sloping bank at the bottom of which was an open culvert. Both pltf. & his driver knew the place well. On the occasion in question the driver drove the horse & cart up to the door of the weighing office. The sloping bank was 40 feet behind the cart. He left the horse & cart unattended, as he & other drivers usually did, & went into the office, where he remained for a few minutes. The horse in his absence backed the cart over the bank & was dragged backwards into the culvert & injured. In an action in the ct. against the co. for negligence, the jury found a verdict for pltf. The ct. judge entered judgment in accordance with the verdict:—Held: there was no evidence of any breach of duty on the part of defts. causing the accident, & they were entitled to judgment.—NORMAN v. GREAT WESTERN RY. CO., [1915] 1 K. B. 584; 84 L. J. K. B. 598; 112 L. T. 266; 31 T. L. R. 53, C. A.

140. Animals poisoned by substance spread on field—Liability of landlord.—On a demise of land or the vesture of land (as the eatage of a field) for a specific term at a certain rent, there is no implied obligation on the part of the lessor that it shall be fit for the purpose for which it is taken.

Where A. agreed in writing to take the eatage of 24 acres of land from B. for seven months, at a rent of £40, & stocked the land with beasts, several of which died a few days afterwards from the effect of a poisonous substance, which had accidentally been spread over the field without B.'s knowledge:—Held: A. was not entitled to throw up the land, but continued liable for the whole rent.—SUTTON v. TEMPLE (1843), 12 M. & W. 52; 13 L. J. Ex. 17; 2 L. T. O. S. 150; 7 Jur. 1065; 152 E. R. 1108.

gists, 5 cwt. of arsenite of soda for the purpose of dipping cattle, & it was delivered in ten drums, on which were labels with the word "Poison," & the statement that the tin contained 8½ lbs. of 80 per cent. arsenite of soda, & that the whole contents of the tin were to be dissolved in 400 gallons of water to make the dip. Each drum in fact contained 56 lbs. of arsenite, & the labels were meant for tins & not for drums. The manager of applts.' estate, after communicating with resps., believed that each drum contained only 8½ lbs. of arsenite, mixed with something else, & the whole of the contents of the ten drums was placed in 4,350 gallons of water. The dip so made was too strong & some of applts.' cattle were killed & others injured. In an action by applts. against resps. for negligence resps. denied negligence & pleaded contributory negligence. The trial judge found in favour of applts.:—Held: there was evidence on which he could reasonably so find.—BRITISH CHARTERED CO. OF SOUTH AFRICA v. LENNON, LTD. (1915), 113 L. T. 935; 31 T. L. R. 585, P. C.

142. Negligent repair of highway—Death of horse caused by overstrain—Contributory negligence.—In an action to recover damages for the death of a horse, which had died after pulling a loaded waggon over a stretch of country road which was being laid with granite by defts., the particulars of negligence alleged were, (1) that the road was not closed; (2) that no warning notice was erected; (3) that the road had not been scarified; (4) that the road was not laid in halves; (5) that the road was laid with granite to so great a depth as 5 inches. There was evidence to support these allegations. It appeared also that the stretch of country road was about 130 feet in length, part of it rolled, but not rolled in, & the rest of it unrolled, or only rolled once. The waggoner put his horses to the task without asking for help from the men with the steam-roller that was there, or otherwise. The waggoner could not turn round in the lane. The jury found (1) that there was negligence on the part of defts.' servants; (2) that pltf. & his driver could not, by the exercise of reasonable care, have avoided the consequences of defts.' negligence; & (3) that the death of pltf.'s horse was the natural & necessary consequence of defts.' negligence:—Held: there was evidence of negligence to be left to the jury, but as the waggoner saw the condition of the road & elected to take the risk of drawing the waggon over it, the death of the horse was not the natural & necessary consequence of defts.' negligence, & pltf. was not entitled to recover damages.—TORRANCE v. ILFORD URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL (1909), 73 J. P. 225; 25 T. L. R. 355; 53 Sol. Jo. 301; 7 L. G. R. 554, C. A.

In the course of the voyage, some of the animals, in consequence of the agitation of the ship in a storm, were killed, & others, from the same cause, received such injury that they died before the termination of the voyage insured:—Held: this was a loss by a peril of the sea, for which the underwriters were liable.—*LAWRENCE v. 145. Animal injured—Meaning of “walking.”] —By a policy of insurance a fox terrier dog, which had taken several prizes, was insured from the Mersey to Bombay & thence by rail to Lahore. The policy was in the form of an ordinary Lloyd's policy with the addition of the following written clause:—“This insurance is against all risks, including mortality from any cause, jettison, & washing overboard, but walking at Lahore, Punjab, to be deemed a safe arrival.” During the transit the dog was injured, & in consequence of the injury was unable upon arrival at Lahore to use one of its legs, being, therefore, only capable of locomotion upon three legs:—Held: (1) the risk of the injury was covered by the policy, inasmuch as the insurance against “all risks” was an addition to the ordinary perils; (2) the words “walking at Lahore, Punjab, to be deemed a safe arrival” did not merely qualify the risk of mortality, but had reference also to the other risks insured against, so that if the dog walked at Lahore within the policy, no claim under it could be made; (3) “walking” at Lahore meant that the dog must be capable of locomotion in the usual way upon four legs, & as it was unable to use one leg, the insurers were liable under the policy.—JACOB v. GAVILLER (1902), 87 L. T. 26; 50 W. R. 428; 18 T. L. R. 402; 7 Com. Cas. 116.

146. Animal slaughtered on arrival—Meaning of “mortality.”]—By a Lloyd's policy of marine re-insurance a bull was insured “against all risks including mortality, jettison & washing overboard.” The policy contained the clause “Warranted nevertheless free of capture, seizure & detention, & the consequences thereof, or any attempt thereat”:—Held: (1) the word “mortality” ought to be understood as meaning death from natural influences & diseases, & not violent death caused to the animal after its arrival at the port of destination by reason of local regulations which compelled its slaughter, in consequence of the existence of foot-&-mouth disease amongst the animals aboard the vessel; (2) even if “mortality” did mean such violent death, the underwriters of the Lloyd's policy were protected from liability in respect of it by the warranty.—ST. PAUL FIRE & MARINE INSURANCE CO. v. MORICE (1906), 22 T. L. R. 449; 11 Com. Cas. 153.

PART III. SECT. 1, SUB-SECT. 1.—G.

a. Sheep Protection Acts—Payment of compensation under.]—Held: 32 Vict. c. 31 (O.), which required municipalities to provide compensation to the owners of sheep killed by dogs, for the damage they thereby sustained, was not confined to county municipalities & to municipalities within their jurisdiction, but applied also to towns which had withdrawn from the jurisdiction of the county.—WILLIAMS v. PORT HOPE TOWN (1877), 27 C. P. 548.—CAN.

b. —.] Pltf.'s sheep had been killed by dogs:—Held: there was no appeal from the valuation of defts.' inspector, & under Sheep Protection Act, s. 18, it was discretionary on defts. to pay two-thirds of that value or a smaller sum.—CRAIG v. MALAHIDE, LIDDLE v. MALAHIDE (1909), 13 O. W. R. 686.—CAN.

c. —.] By Dog Tax & Sheep Protection Act, R. S. O., 1914 (c. 246), s. 18, a right of relief is given to sheep owners whose sheep have been killed by any dog, the owner of which is not known, on an application satisfactory to the council of the municipality, but nothing in the Act or otherwise makes the municipal corpn. liable in a ct. of law for the damage done; & a Divisional Ct. was prohibited from entertaining an action to recover from a township corpn. the value of sheep alleged to have been killed in the township by dogs of unknown owners.—RE HOGAN v. TUDOR (1915), 9 O. W. N. 142; 34 O. L. R. 571.—CAN.

SUB-SECT. 2.—RIGHT TO FOLLOW AND RECOVER STRAYING DOMESTIC ANIMALS.

149. Escaping animals distrained by landlord on whose land they were found.]—Two men being severally seised of two adjoining closes, the enclosure & fence between the closes belonging to one of them by prescription, the cattle of the other escaped out of one close into the other through a defect of the fence. Immediately, & before the owner of the cattle could drive them out into his own close, the lord distrained them for services. The case was that the distress was taken by a lessor for rent reserved on a lease for years, & not by a lord for his services:—Held: (1) no fault could be assigned in the owner of the cattle for their escape, nor did any law oblige him to keep his cattle in his own close; (2) there must be judgment for pltf.—ANON. (1572), 3 Dyer, 317b; 73 E. R. 719.

150. Animal seized as estray.]—In an action of trover & conversion of a cow, deft. pleaded that the Crown being seised in fee of a manor had demised it & all estrays therein to him, & that this cow came thither as an estray, whereupon he seized her & caused her to be proclaimed in two market towns next adjoining, & pltf. claimed property but refused on demand to pay for the feeding of the cow, & traversed that he was guilty of conversion at Salop. It was thereupon demurred, because (1) deft. alleged not the letters patents, nor that the proclamations were made in the parish church, (2) he traversed the vill:—Held: pltf. entitled to judgment.—BROWNLOW v. LAMBERT (1599), Cro. Eliz. 716; 78 E. R. 950.

151. — Straying again from land where seised.]—A man seised of a manor, to which he has stray appendant by prescription, seizes an ox as a stray within the manor & makes proclamations according to law, & within the year & day lets the manor with

d. Animal at large shot by magistrate's order—Trespass.]—In an action against a justice of the peace for ordering a goat, which was abroad & a public nuisance, to be shot, pltf. failed to support his declaration in an action of trespass by alleging property in the goat, he having forfeited same by breach of the municipal law.—HANN v. CHAMBERS (1881), 6 Nfld. L. R. 356.—NFLJ.

PART III. SECT. 1, SUB-SECT. 2.

e. Animals wrongfully detained.]—In trespass for breaking & entering pltf.'s barn, deft. justified on the ground that his cattle had been wrongfully taken by pltf., who locked them up in his barn, & refused to give them up:—Held: sufficient.—GRAHAM v. GREEN (1862), 5 All. 330.—CAN.

all royalties, liberties, etc. After the year & day has passed, the lessee shall have the stray, forasmuch as the property of the stray is not altered nor changed before the year & day; & the lord of the manor until the year & day are past has but the custody, so that the owner may rehave it always within the year & day, if he will pay for the meat of it; nor can the ox be laboured, or used by the lord before the year & day &, therefore, he shall be paid for the meat, unless it be such a beast as of necessity ought to be used as a milch cow; & if one take a stray & within a year & a day it strays out of the manor, the lord may retake it by seizure.—ANON. (1612), 12 Co. Rep. 101; 77 E. R. 1375.

152. Animals driven on right of way—Escaping into adjoining lands.]—If a man has a way over the land of another for his cattle, & upon the way he scares his cattle, so that they run out of the way upon the land of the owner, & the party who drives the cattle freshly pursues them, etc., in trespass he who has the way may plead this special matter in justification (RICHARDSON, C.J.).—ANON. (1631), Het. 166; 124 E. R. 426.

153. Sheep stolen—Entry on field of stranger.]—If B.'s sheep are stolen & put upon A.'s field, B. has no right, unless he enters with the object of finding & apprehending the felon, to go upon A.'s land merely to search for his sheep, & B. has no right to take his sheep away without A.'s licence, for in that case A. would be left without remedy for the damage done by the sheep (ROLL, C.J.).—TOPLADYE v. STALYE (1649), Sty. 165; 82 E. R. 615.

SUB-SECT. 1.—HARMLESS DOMESTIC ANIMALS.

A. Liability for Trespass.

PART III. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 1.—A.

154 i. Obligation of owner.]—At common law the owner of animals must keep them from trespassing on his neighbour's crops, though enclosed by no fence or by an insufficient fence.—WATT v. DRYSDALE (1907), 17 Man. L. R. 15; 6 W. L. R. 234.—CAN.

154 iii. —.]—Sheep broke into pltf.'s land & damaged his crops. There was no local law compelling land owners to erect any particular description of fence:—Held: it was the duty of the owners of animals to see they did not trespass on the soil of others.—DE GRISH v. MORRISSEY (1875), 6 Nfld. L. R. 107.—NFLD.

154 iv. —.]—Where cattle are permitted to trespass upon the public highway, the owner is liable for damage which they may cause upon the land of an adjoining proprietor into which they stray, & in such case it is not a sufficient defence that pltf.'s fence was not a lawful fence, or that there was a custom among inhabitants of the district to fence against cattle.—SMITH v. BOUTILLIER (1907), 42 N. S. R. 1; 2 E. L. R. 212.—CAN.

154 v. —.]—Deft.'s cow, which was to the knowledge of deft. in the habit of breaking through fences, broke into pltf.'s pasture & killed pltf.'s cow:—Held: pltf. could recover the value of the cow.—MESSENGER v. STEVENS (1910), 9 E. L. R. 91.—CAN.

154 vi. — Evicted farm.]—The want of boundary fences is no defence to an action for trespass. Every man is bound to keep his cattle on his own land; &, in the case of an evicted farm, if the fences are levelled, the inference ought to be that they have been levelled for annoyance, & for the easy plunder of the land by the neighbours.—WALSH v. COAKLEY & SULLIVAN, 32 I. L. T. 356.—IR.

154 vii. — To owner of turbary rights.]—An action for trespass will lie for damage caused by the cattle of the owner of the soil & freehold of a bog to had common; that the cattle strayed from the common, & deft. drove them back as soon as he could:—Held: a bad plea.

It behoves him to use his common so that he shall do no hurt to any man, & if the land in which he has common be not inclosed, it behoves him to keep the beasts in the common & out of the land of any other (BRIAN, C.J.).—ANON. (1480), Y. B., 20 Ed. 4, fo. 10, pl. 10.

157. — Default of plaintiff leaving property unprotected—Licensee.]—A. licensed P. to put a stack of hay upon the land of A. A. leased that land to W., & the hay remained there for two years. W. put in his cattle, who wasted the hay, & P. brought an action of trespass:—Held: the action did not lie, because the hay was not removed in reasonable time, & the licence was determined by the lease to W., & P. was bound to look that the beasts of A. or W. did not eat the hay. The damage came to him by his own fault.—PLUMMER v. WEBB (1619), Noy, 98; 74 E. R. 1064; sub nom. WEBB (WEBB, WEBBE) v. PATERNOSTER, Palm. 71; Poph. 151; Godb. 282; 2 Roll. 143, 152.

158. — Tithe-owner.]—Trespass for causing defts.' cattle to eat up & trample upon corn, grain & straw, which pltf. had set out for tithes:—Held: though the proprietor of tithes left them on the land more than a reasonable time after they were set out, & after he had notice thereof, the owner of the land could not justify, in trespass, turning in his cattle upon the land to depasture it in the usual course of husbandry, whereby the cattle consumed the tithes, but his remedy was either by distress or by action.—WILLIAMS v. LADNER (1798), 8 Term Rep. 72; 101 E. R. 1273.

turf, cut & spread on a plot of such bog (not fenced or divided from the residue) by the owner of other lands, who enjoys the right to cut & save turf on such plot, where such cattle are depastured by the owner of the soil upon the bog without provision by him for the prevention of such injury by his cattle to the turf. The depasturage of cattle by the owner of the soil of the servient tenement, without such provision against injury to the turf of the dominant tenant so situated, is, in such circumstances, a user by such owner of the soil of his natural rights, which is unreasonable in relation to the dominant tenant as prejudicing the value of the incorporeal hereditament in the nature of a profit à prendre enjoyed by the dominant tenant, by endangering the saving of the turf.—CRONIN v. CONNOR, [1913] 2 I. R. 119.—IR.

154 viii. — Negligent act of third party.]—A man whose field is properly fenced is not liable for the trespass of his cattle, caused by the negligent act of a stranger in using a right of way through the field.—M'GIBBON v. M'CURRY (1909), 43 I. L. T. 132.—IR.

159. Enforceable by vendor—Having temporary property in soil.]—Pltf. bought a crop of turnips in a field, with a proviso that half the crop should be consumed on the land, & deft. bought a crop of grass in an adjoining field from same vendor. Pltf. was alleged to have left the gate open, & some of the sheep went through it & ate some of the turnips. On subsequent days all the sheep went into the turnip field, but not by the gate. In an action for damages:—Held: (1) the proviso that half the turnips should be consumed on the land did not prevent pltf. from suing, as it did not prevent him from having the temporary property in the soil; (2) although, if pltf. left the gate open on the first day, he could not recover damages for that day, yet this would not alter the duty of deft. to keep his sheep from straying on the other days, & pltf. was entitled to damages in respect of the other days.—WELLAWAY v. COURTIER, [1918] 1 K. B. 200; 87 L. J. K. B. 299; 118 L. T. 256; 34 T. L. R. 115, D. C.

160. Dog killing sheep—Consent or incitement of master.]—If a dog hunts & chases sheep or kills them without his master setting him on thereto, & the master have an action for trespass brought against him, he may clearly plead not guilty.—ANON. (1537), 1 Dyer, 29a; 73 E. R. 64.

161. ———.]—The master of a dog, which has killed a sheep, the master not being aware of such a disposition on the part of the dog, shall not be punishable, otherwise if he had notice of the dog's disposition.—ANON. (1537), 1 Dyer, 25b; 73 E. R. 56.

162. ———.]—If a man's dog runs at sheep & kills them, not with his consent, there will no action lie. But otherwise if with his consent.—BAKER v. WEBBERLY (1631), Het. 171; 124 E. R. 429.

163. ——— Mischievous act of third party.]—If the owner of a dog keeps him properly secured, but another person improperly lets him loose & urges him to mischief, the owner is not liable. Proof, therefore, that A.'s dog has killed B.'s sheep will not entitle B. to recover compensation from A.; for consistently with such proof, the dog may have been properly secured by A., & may have been improperly let loose & urged to mischief by a third party, without the knowledge, & even against the express prohibition, of A.—FLEEMING v. ORR (1855), 2 Macq. 14; 25 L. T. O. S. 73; 19 J. P. 277, H. L.

164. Common—Infringement of right.]—A copyholder having a right of common may have an action against a stranger for putting beasts into the common, by which he cannot have his common of pasture in so beneficial a manner as before. But if the trespass be so small that the commoner sustains no loss, the commoner shall not have any action for the trespass. The lord of the soil, however, may have an action of trespass, be it greater or less.

If pltf. declare that deft. put in his cattle, etc., & it be found that he did not put them in, but that they came in by escape, pltf. shall have judgment, for the eating the grass is the substance.—MARY'S CASE (1612), 9 Co. Rep. 111b; 77 E. R. 895; sub

Animal entering house or shop.]—If a man is driving cows through a town, & one of them goes into another man's house, trespass does not lie for this, because it was involuntary, & a trespass ought to be done voluntarily, & so it is injuria, a hurt to another, & so it is damnum (DODDRIDGE, J.).—*MITTEN v. 169. Injury by depastured cattle—Eating shoots of trees.]—If one has a right of pasture over a close which in part consists of a wood, & the trees are cut down, & the roots dug out, the fact that the cattle eat the young shoots springing up in what was the wood does not afford ground for an action, since the cattle cannot depasture thereon without so doing.—CLITHERO v. HIGGS (1636), W. Jo. 338; 82 E. R. 203.

160 i. Dog killing sheep—Evidence.]—In an action to recover the value of sheep, alleged to have been killed & injured by deft.'s dog, the evidence showed that, after some sheep had been killed, a watch was kept, when deft.'s dog & another, owned by C., were found attacking a sheep, deft.'s dog having hold of the sheep at the time, & that the two dogs had been heard barking in the vicinity on several occasions, & that, after deft.'s dog was sent away, no more sheep were destroyed:—Held:

(1) there was evidence to support a finding that it was deft.'s dog which did the killing; (2) deft. was liable for the value of the sheep which his dog was found killing, & for one-half of the remaining damage.—WILLIAMS v. WOODWORTH (1899), 32 N. S. R. 271.—CAN.

166 i. Animal entering house.]—A cow, while being driven with several others along a public street in charge of a boy, suddenly bolted into the kitchen of a house. A woman who was in the kitchen at the time, in an action of damages against the owner of the cow for negligence in employing an incompetent driver, averred that in consequence of the sudden appearance of the cow she had sustained a nervous shock, from the effects of which she had not recovered, & which she believed would be permanent:—Held: the action was relevant.—*GILLIGAN v. 171. — Roadside grazing—Disputed title.]—Action claiming a declaration that H. was entitled as lord of the manor of T., or as owner of lands adjoining a way called W. Lane, to the lumbage & pasture in it, & for an injunction to restrain defts. from grazing cattle & sheep in that lane. By an award made under an Inclosure Act of 1774 certain lands were allotted & roads set out as public highways. From a short time after the passing of the Act the pasturage of the lane in question was let annually by the inhabitants in vestry assembled, & there had been no claim by the lords of the manor until this action. Deft. was tenant of the pasturage under the vestry, it being provided by his lease that he should not put sheep in the lane. There was no evidence in whom the soil of the road was vested before the passing of the above Act. No grant of the road was produced, nor any evidence of the enrolment of such grant:—Held: (1) a lawful origin must be presumed from the long usage, & the resumption was that the road was vested in some person as trustee for the inhabitants, & a presumption might also be made either that the grant of the road had been enrolled, or that it was made for some purpose which did not require it; (2) the churchwardens & overseers as trustees under Poor Relief Act, 1819 (c. 12), s. 17, of lands belonging to the parish, had acquired a good title to the road under Stat. Limitations, subject to the public right of way; (3) deft. was not a trespasser on the road as regards pltf., even if he had broken his agreement not to put sheep in the road, & if the sheep trespassed on pltf.'s land it was his own fault for not keeping up his fences as bound by the award.—HAIGH v. WEST, [1893] 2 Q. B. 19; 62 L. J. Q. B. 592; 69 L. T. 165; 57 J. P. 358; 4 R. 396, C. A.

174 i. Through defect of fences—Duty to fence.]—Pltf. & deft., adjoining land-owners, agreed to keep in repair the line fence between their lots, which was less than five feet in height. Deft. allowing his portion to get into disrepair, his cattle got on pltf.'s land & damaged it, & ran at large on the highway, whence, by breaking down pltf.'s fences, they got on pltf.'s land & further damaged it. A township bye-law provided that no fence should be less than five feet high, & prohibited the running at large of all breachy cattle:—Held: deft. was liable for the damages sustained by pltf., & such liability was not affected by the bye-law.—BARBER v. OLEAVE (1901), 2 O. L. R. 213.—CAN.

174 ii. — — —.]—A. leased land to B. for the purpose of grazing his sheep, & covenanted to keep the fences in repair & look after the sheep. A. resided near the land, & B. lived at a distance. One of the boundary fences fell into disrepair, & B.'s sheep escaped & damaged the crop of C., an adjoining owner. No notice of disrepair had at any time been given to A. C. sued B., who joined A. as third party. C. recovered damages & costs against B., & the judge gave judgment for B. against A. for the amount of the damages & costs ordered to be paid by B. to C.:—Held: (1) A. was liable for breach of covenant, notwithstanding no notice of disrepair had been given to him; (2) the damages were not too remote, & the judge was right in awarding as part of the damages the costs incurred by B. in defending the action brought by C.—DUNLOP v. TROY, [1915] V. L. R. 639.—AUS.

176 i. Fence pulled down.]—Deft. threw down a fence & entered on land in pltf.'s possession claiming it to be a highway, & in consequence of the fence being thrown down, deft.'s cattle went in upon pltf.'s field:—Held: this was not a "breaking into a field under lawful fence" by the cattle, & a justice of the peace had no jurisdiction to proceed against deft. in trespass under

If A. does not so fence, nor B. either for want of fences, & C.'s cattle go on B.'s land & thence to A.'s land, A. may sue C. in trespass, for A. was only bound to fence against B., & every one ought to keep his cattle as well in open lands where there is no enclosure as in inclosed lands. Suppose, however, A. has Greenacre joining Whiteacre both belonging to him; A. is bound to fence Whiteacre against Blackacre which is B.'s land, for otherwise if B.'s cattle go into Whiteacre & thence into Greenacre it is no trespass against A., for it happened with A.'s fault.—ANON. (1482), Jenk. 161; 145 E. 177. — — — How discharged.]—In an action of trespass for breaking down pltf.'s fences & eating up his grass by hogs, deft. pleaded that the fences were out of repair:—Held: (1) a plea excusing a trespass by cattle from the defects of fences must show the fences to be pltf.'s & the closes to be contiguous; (2) the plea was bad.—*KING v. of tenancy, he was liable, as between himself & the landlord, to keep & leave in good repair, & which divided the farms, became out of repair, with the result that two of deft.'s horses escaped from a field forming part of the farm occupied by pltf. & injured a colt belonging to him. Deft. entered into an agreement with the landlord, in terms similar to that of pltf. to keep in repair the fences on his holding:—Held: deft. was liable to pltf. in damages for the injuries caused to pltf.'s colt, inasmuch as the general principle that owners of animals must keep them upon their own land at their peril applied, & the mere fact that pltf. had committed a breach of the obligation he was under as between himself & the landlord to repair the fence was not enough to bring the case within the exception of damage caused by pltf.'s own default recognised in Fletcher v. Rylands (1866), L. R. 1 Ex. 265; affd. (1868), L. R. 3 H. L. 330.—HOLGATE v. BLEAZARD, [1917] 1 K. B. 443; 86 L. J. K. B. 270; 115 L. T. 788; 33 T. L. R. 116.

179. — Prescriptive liability.—Pltf. declared that he was possessed of a close adjoining deft.'s, & that the tenants & occupiers of that close had time out of mind made & repaired the fence between the two closes, & that for want of repair deft.'s cattle came into pltf.'s close, etc.:—Held: (1) either trespass or case lay, trespass because it was pltf.'s ground & not deft.'s, & case because the first wrong was a nonfeasance & neglect to repair, & that omission was the gist of the action & the trespass was only a consequential damage; (2) this was a charge upon deft. against common right; for the law bounds every man's property & is his fence, & this is obliging another to make a fence for him; (3) where a charge is imposed on another, & that against common right, & the charge is laid on him as owner of the soil or terre tenant, pltf. in his declaration must make himself a good title, but where he declares against deft. as a wrongdoer, it is sufficient for him to declare on his possession; (4) pltf. had sufficiently made out his title in the declaration by showing that deft. was bound to repair by prescription.—*STAR v. 180. — Horse trespassing from adjoining land.—Through defect of fences which it was deft.'s duty to repair, his mare strayed in the night-time from his close into an adjoining field, & so into a field of pltf.'s in which was a horse. From some unexplained cause, the animals quarrelled, & pltf.'s horse received a kick from deft.'s mare, which broke his leg, & he was necessarily killed:—Held: (1) deft. was responsible for his mare's trespass, & it was unnecessary to give evidence that the mare was vicious to deft.'s knowledge, as it was through his negligence that the horse & the mare came together; (2) the damage was not too remote.—LEE v. RILEY (1865), 18 C. B. N. S. 722; 34 L. J. C. P. 212; 12 L. T. 388; 11 Jur. N. S. 527; 13 W. R. 751; 144 E. R. 629.

181. — Imposed by statute on third party.—A railway co. let surplus land to a tenant, separating it from the adjoining land not taken by means of an open post-&-rail fence 4 feet high. The tenant planted his land with vegetables. Horses kept on the adjoining land of deft., by reason of the insufficiency of the fence, passed their heads through & over it & did damage to the tenant's crop:—Held: the duty of fencing being by Railways (Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 20), s. 68, imposed upon the railway co., deft. was not responsible to their tenant for the trespass of his cattle.—WISEMAN v. BOOKER (1878), 3 C. P. D. 184; 38 L. T. 292; 42 J. P. 295; 26 W. R. 634.

182. — Cattle straying from highway Reasonable time for removal.—Where cattle passing along a public highway stray into an adjoining field, through defect of fences, the owner of the cattle is bound to remove them within a reasonable time; & what is a reasonable time is not to be determined by the judge, but is a question for the jury, with reference to all the surrounding circumstances.

In Nov., between 5 & 6 o'clock in the evening, pltf.'s drovers were driving thirty-six bullocks along a public highway, when thirteen of them strayed into deft.'s field through a gap in the fence. The drovers left them in the field & drove the other twenty-three to the nearest public-house, where they lodged them for the night. In about an hour the drovers returned to the field for the thirteen, but in the meantime deft. had impounded them. There had been nothing to prevent the drovers from immediately driving them out of the field except into which a neighbour's pig may break & enter & do damage, against the owner of the pig, unless he can excuse the act for defect of fences, or upon some other special ground.—BLACKLOCK v. MILLIKAN (1854), 3 C. P. 34.—CAN.

178 iii.—Boundary Lines Act, R. S. M. (c. 12), s. 4, does not supersede the common law liability of an owner of cattle for all their trespasses except such as are due to defects in fences, which complainant is bound as between himself & such owner to keep up; & such owner will be liable for the trespasses committed by his cattle, unless it is shown that complainant was bound to keep up & repair the particular part of the fence through which the cattle entered. The common law rule is not displaced by a joint liability to keep up fences.—GARRIOCH v. MCKAY (1901), 13 Man. L. R. 404.—CAN.

pleasure grounds, & destroyed cabbages. Deft. pleaded that while the cattle were so depasturing, in pursuance of the agreement, the trespass was committed in consequence of pltf.'s fences being insufficient. The jury found that the fences were insufficient, & for this reason found for deft.:—Held: where a person contracted to permit the cattle of another to graze on his land, he ought to point out the portion on which the cattle were to graze, & he was bound to provide that they did not go elsewhere.—HICKEY v. COSGRAVE (1861), 6 Ir. Jur. N. S. 251.—IR.

182 i.—Cattle straying from highway.—The power of a municipal council, under Municipal Act, R. S. M., 1902 (c. 116), s. 644 (d), to pass a bye-law limiting the right of a landowner to recover damages for any injury done by trespassing animals to cases in which the land is enclosed by a fence of the nature, kind & height required by the bye-law, is restricted to cases in which the animals go upon the land from some adjoining land where they have a right to be, & such bye-law is no protection to the owner of animals trespassing from a highway, if the council has not passed a bye-law under s. 643 (b), for allowing & regulating the running at large of animals in the municipality.—JACK v. STEVENSON (1910), 19 Man. L. R. 717; 13 W. L. R. 486.—CAN.

1. Straying animal — Irritated by children—Injury to child.—Deft.'s mule escaped from his enclosure, &, after several hours' ill-treatment from children of the neighbourhood, took refuge on the premises of pltf., whose child, who had tried to seize & mount it, although warned not to do so, was badly injured by the animal:—Held: deft. not liable.—LACROIX v. JASMIN (1894), Q. R. 6 S. C. 418.—CAN.

that they wished to take care of the others. In an action of trespass against deft. for impounding the bullocks, Bramwell, B., ruled that as the drovers did not at once proceed to drive the bullocks out of deft.'s field, but left them there while they took the others to a place of safety, they did not remove them in a reasonable time, & directed a verdict for deft. :—Held : a misdirection.

If a person will neglect to fence he must put up with the inconveniences consequent upon it ; & one is that cattle being driven along the road will occasionally stray (MARTIN, B.).—GOODWYN (GOODWIN) v. CHEVELEY (1859), 4 H. & N. 631 ; 28 L. J. Ex. 298 ; 33 L. T. O. S. 284 ; 23 J. P. 487 ; 7 W. R. 631 ; 157 E. R. 989.

183. — Horse kicking through hedge.—Defts.' horse having injured pltf.'s mare by biting & kicking her through the fence separating pltf.'s land from defts.' :—Held : there was a trespass by the act of defts.' horse, for which they were liable, apart from any question of negligence on their part.

In the case of animals trespassing on land, the mere act of the animal belonging to a man which he could not foresee, or which he took all reasonable means of preventing, may be a trespass, inasmuch as the same act, if done by himself, would have been a trespass (BRETT, J.).—*ELLIS v. 184. Dog trespassing Consent or incitement of master.—Deft. had permission to sport on the right hand side of the road, but his dog crossed over the road & ranged over a field on the other side :—Held : (1) it was for the jury to say whether the dog had crossed over by incitement of deft. ; (2) if the dog had escaped against deft.'s will & he had no intention of sporting on the other side of the road, deft. was entitled to the jury's verdict.—DIMMOCK v. ALLENBY (1810), cited 2 Marsh. at p. 582.

Several of them broke loose in an infuriated condition, & one broke into resp.'s garden & gored him. trespass, in the absence of negligence or scienter.—PATERSON v. FLEMING (1904), 23 N. Z. L. R. 676.—N.Z.

i. It was proved at the trial that deft. had a dog of a peculiarly mischievous disposition, being accustomed to chase & destroy game on its own account, & that that vice was known to deft., who notwithstanding allowed the dog to be at large in the neighbourhood of pltf.'s wood, & that the dog consequently entered the wood & did the damage complained of :—Held : the declaration was proved in an actionable sense, & was also good after verdict. Qu. : whether the owner of a dog is answerable in trespass for every unauthorised entry of the animal into the land of another.—*READ v. The jury on these facts considered defts. had committed an intentional trespass & that it was not a mere involuntary accident, & granted pltf. 30s. damages. 200. Runaway horse—Trespass & battery—Justification.]—Action for trespass, assault & battery. Deft. pleaded that he rode a horse on the highway, & that the horse being frightened ran away with him, so that he could not stop it; that he called to pltf. who was in the road to take care, but pltf. did not get out of the way so that deft.'s horse ran against pltf. against deft.'s will, which was the trespass complained of. Pltf. demurred on the ground that the plea justified a battery which was in law no battery at all:—Held: there must be judgment on the demurrer for pltf., as deft. might have given this justification in evidence upon the general issue.—GIBBONS (GIBBON) v. for his negligence, in not having the tackle good.—WELSH v. LAWRENCE (1818), 2 Chit. 262.

202. ——— Defective cart.]—In an action in a city. ct. for negligently driving a horse & cart, pltf. having simply proved the fact of a collision in circumstances which might or might not amount to negligence, deft. proved that the accident arose from the horse suddenly beginning to kick, whereby the shafts of the cart were broken, & the driver thrown out, when the horse started off, & ran against & injured pltf.'s horse. The judge, upon this evidence, ordered a verdict for pltf., "being of opinion that the breaking of the shafts, even under the circumstances stated by deft.'s witnesses, showed a defect in the cart, which raised a presumption of negligence in the owner"—Held: the verdict was right.—*TEMPLEMAN v. In an action by the widow under Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (c. 93):—Held: neither the fact of deft.'s being on the pavement, nor that of his riding in the public streets a strange horse which he had only bought the previous day, was prima facie evidence of negligence.—HAMMACK v. WHITE (1862), 11 C. B.

202 i. ——— Defective cart.]—C., while riding along a road, was knocked down by a runaway horse, the property of F. The horse had been properly harnessed to a trap, & was being driven in a proper manner, when, owing to a latent defect, a bolt broke, in consequence of which a shaft became detached, frightening the animal & causing it to break away:—Held: it not having been proved that the accident was due either to negligence on the part of F., or to vicious or mischievous propensities or conduct on the part of the horse, C. could not succeed.—*COWELL v. 203 i. ——— Evidence.]—Deft. drove a horse at a rapid rate, & came in contact with pltf.'s carriage, in which the latter was driving with his wife:—Held: the owner was not responsible for the damage caused by the animal while running away, if he proved that the accident occurred without any fault or imprudence on the part of the person in charge thereof.—*GOUGEON v. To make him liable, it must be proved that the accident was his fault.—LA CITE DE QUEBEC v. PICARD (1898), Q. R. 14 S. C. 94.—CAN.

— — — — —.]—When a horse bolts & causes an injury, the owner relieves himself from liability by proving that a sudden letting off of steam by a steam roller, on the street, frightened the horse & made him bolt, the accident being thus the result, not of negligence, but of a fortuitous event.—COLLIER v. LANGEVIN (1911), Q. R. 40 S. C. 441.—CAN.

206 ii. ———.]—Applt. drove a party to a place & left his horse & buggy in charge of two of the party, one of whom took the horse from the shafts & turned it out to graze, with the harness still upon it. The animal took fright, bolted & at a distance of five miles from the place where it had been released from the buggy, knocked down resp. & injured him:—Held: the persons in charge of the horse were applt.'s agents, & he was responsible for the natural consequence of their negligent act of turning the horse loose encumbered with its harness.—LYSNAR v. BINNIE (1904), 24 N. Z. L. R. 241.—N.Z.

206 iii. ———.]—Pursuer averred that the servant in charge of a horse & van belonging to deft. left same unattended in the street, & that the animal bolted & dashed into pursuer's shop window, causing considerable damage. Deft. contended that the mere averment that the horse was left unattended in the street did not necessarily imply fault:—Held: pursuer entitled to an issue.—M'INTOSH v. WADDELL (1896), 24 R. 80; 34 Sc. L. R. 53; 4 S. L. T. 126.—SCOT.

206 iv. ———.]—A carter, who had been ordered by his employer to deliver goods at a country shop, left his horse & cart at the door of the shop in order

204. ———.]—A horse being driven in a public thoroughfare, suddenly, & from no apparent or assignable cause, bolted, & notwithstanding the efforts of the driver, who was not shown to be lacking in skill, became totally unmanageable & caused injury to pltf.:—Held: (1) there was no evidence for the jury; (2) there was no evidence of negligence for the jury arising from the fact that the horse cast a shoe directly after he bolted, & that the driver did not call out or give any warning.—MANZONI v. DOUGLAS (1880), 6 Q. B. D. 145; 50 L. J. Q. B. 289; 45 J. P. 391; 29 W. R. 425.

205. ———.]—Upon proof being given by pltf. that deft.'s horse, harnessed to a cart, was running away unattended along a highway, whereby pltf. being lawfully thereon was injured, the judge cannot rightly nonsuit pltf., as such facts are more consistent with the absence of ordinary care in the superintending the horse than with such care having been used.—WATSON v. WEEKES (1887), cited 57 L. J. Q. B. 394; 52 J. P. 804.

to inquire where the goods were to be put. To accomplish this he had to pass into (or almost into) a back shop out of sight of his horse. The shop was in close proximity to a railway bridge, & while the carter was inside the shop, the horse was startled by a train passing below the bridge, ran off & knocked down a person on the road. The horse was in ordinary circumstances quiet & was accustomed to work near railways:—Held: the carter's employer was liable.—M'EWAN v. CUTHILL (1897), 25 R. 57; 35 Sc. L. R. 58; 5 S. L. T. 181.—SCOT.

206 v. ———.]—Deft.'s driver, after yoking a pony & loading a van in his private yard, opened the gate, & then went three or four yards behind the pony to get his coat. While he was doing so the pony ran off into the street. The driver ran after it, but was unable to reach the pony's head on account of the narrowness of the opening. The pony & van collided with another horse & cart, & seriously injured the horse. The practice in the yard was, immediately after the horses were yoked & the vans loaded, for some one other than the driver to open the gate, or for the driver himself to do so immediately before leading out the horse. The pony was a quiet animal, but had been only four days in deft.'s possession:—Held: deft. liable in damages.—MILNE & Co. v. NIMMO (1898), 25 R. 1150; 35 Sc. L. R. 883; 6 S. L. T. 115.—SCOT.

206 vi. ———.]—Pursuer having alleged that she was knocked down by a horse & lorry of defts., averred that the lorry was in charge of one of their carters, who carelessly & recklessly went away & left unattended the horse, which was known to defts. & their servant to be a high-spirited, nervous animal, & which suddenly started off; & that it was the custom throughout Glasgow for lorries delivering goods to have a man & a boy in charge, the boy to watch the horse while the carter was away, but defts. had no boy with the lorry, or the boy was not attending to his duty:—Held: the case was relevant, & issue approved.—M'CAIRNS v.

& cart unattended while he (deft.) & his son were carrying some of the goods upstairs. In their absence the horse took fright & ran away, & some of the pltf.'s goods were thrown out & injured:—Held: deft. had not been guilty of negligence & was not liable for the damages to the goods.—HAYMAN v. HEWITT (1798), 2 Peake, 170.

207. ——— Mischievous act of third party.]—If a horse & cart are left standing in the street, without any person to watch them, the owner is liable for any damage done by them, though it be occasioned by the act of a passer-by, in striking the horse.—ILLIDGE v. GOODWIN (1831), 5 C. & P. 190.

208. ——— Contributory negligence — Children playing.]—Deft.'s servant left his cart & horse standing in a street thronged with children. Pltf., a child of six or seven years old, was climbing up & down the wheel of the empty cart. Other children drove the horse on & pltf. was thrown down, & the wheel went over his leg:—Held: on this evidence, the judge rightly left it to the jury to say whether there was negligence on the part of deft.'s servant, for if there was, the action was maintainable.—LYNCH v. NURDIN (1841), 1 Q. B. 29; Arn. & H. 158; 4 Per. & Dav. 672; 10 L. J. Q. B. 73; 5 J. P. 319; 5 Jur. 797; 113 E. R. 1041.

206 vii. ——— By cab driver.]—The driver of a cab had drawn up his cab on a stance in line with other vehicles, there being a van immediately in front of his horse, & other cabs behind his. The driver got down from his box, took a bag of oats from a place where it was kept at a distance of ten feet from the horse's head, filled his horse's nose-bag, & then took the bit out of his horse's mouth & put on its nose-bag. He then turned away to put back the bag of oats in its place. As his back was turned the horse, which was a quiet animal, for some unexplained cause ran off. There was a bye-law that the driver of a hackney carriage, when same was on a stance, should either sit on the box or stand at the horse's head:—Held: there was no culpa on the part of the driver inferring liability against him or his employers for damage done by the horse in its flight.—SHAW v. CROALL & SONS (1885), 12 R. 1186; 22 Sc. L. R. 792.—SCOT.

206 viii. ——— Dropping reins.]—It is not negligence per se for the driver of a horse of a quiet disposition, standing in the street, to let go the reins while he alights from the vehicle to fasten a head-weight, there being at the time little traffic & no noise or disturbance to frighten the animal; & the owner of the horse is not responsible for damages caused by the horse in running away when frightened by a sudden noise just after the driver has alighted.—SULLIVAN v. MCWILLIAM (1893), 20 A. R. 627.—CAN.

206 ix. ———.]—Deft., drawing a load of hay along a country road, had to get off his wagon to adjust the load, leaving the reins lying on the ground. While loosening the binder the team ran away & injured pltf.:—Held: deft. not guilty of negligence.—RYAN v. MCINTOSH (1909), 14 O. W. R. 482;

r. ——— But tied up—Negligently.]—Deft.'s horse escaped through not having been sufficiently tied by his son, & knocked down pltf.:—Held: deft., having failed to show that the escape was due to some agency over which he had no control, was liable.—DOUGHTY v. DOBBS (1903), 3 O. W. R. 19.—CAN.

s. ——— Frightened by fortuitous event.]—A horse of deft.'s team was tied to a telegraph pole, with a leather halter & a hemp rope of sufficient strength to hold the horse in ordinary circumstances. The team became frightened by some unknown cause, broke loose, ran away & injured pltf.:—Held: the accident occurred through fortuitous cause, & not through the negligence of deft.—MOORE v. CROSLAND (1907), 6 W. L. R. 199.—CAN.

t. Horse not sufficiently under control—Negligence.]—Deft. was taking two horses along a road on which motor traffic was common, leading one & allowing the other to follow at some distance. This second horse strayed on to a bank at the side of the road from which it suddenly jumped down, upset pltf.'s motor cycle & injured both it & pltf.:—Held: to take a horse along the road uncontrolled was negligent, without proof of scienter of vice in the horse, & the damage was not too remote.—LIND v. STUMP (1916), 12 Tas. L. R. 74.—AUS.

w. ———.]—Deft.'s horses & carriage met, opposite the gate of deft.'s stable yard, a horse & truck coming in the opposite direction, & attempted to pass on the side nearest the stable yard, when the horses suddenly turned in towards the yard, knocking down & injuring pltf., who was coming along the sidewalk near the gate:—Held: pltf. entitled to a verdict.—LOWNDS v.

209. ——— Direction to jury.]—Pltf.'s horse & cart were standing unattended in front of his shop, & defts.' servant having occasion to go to the shop, drew up a horse & van of defts.' immediately behind pltf.'s cart, which he also left unattended. Shortly afterwards pltf.'s horse broke through the shop window, & there was evidence that defts.' horse had moved on & forced it to do so. In an action by pltf. against defts. the judge directed the jury that the question for them was whether defts.' van occasioned the accident, & whether same was brought about by the negligence of defts.' servant, & that there was no evidence of contributory negligence on the part of pltf.:—Held: (1) this direction was wrong; (2) there was clear evidence of negligence on the part of pltf., & the judge ought to have left it to the jury to say whether such negligence proximately contributed to the accident.

The proper question for a jury in such a case is that stated in the judgment of WIGHTMAN, J., in Tuff v. Warman (1858), 5 C. B. N. S. 573.—*WALTON v. LONDON, BRIGHTON & SOUTH COAST RY. x. Horse driven at excessive speed—Negligence.]—Action to recover damages for alleged negligence, in being struck by deft.'s horse & carriage while being driven at an excessive speed. Deft. alleged negligence on pltf.'s part, in view of his age, in riding a bicycle on a street overrun with cars, motors & other vehicles:—Held: pltf. entitled to damages.—LESLIE v. MCKEOWN (1909), 14 O. W. R. 846; 1 O. W. N. 106.—CAN.

y. Horse shying—Negligence—Evidence.]—Deft.'s horse, which was known to shy occasionally, whilst being driven in a public street, & after turning a corner, shied for no ostensible reason, with the result that the shaft of deft.'s cart ran into pltf.'s mule, causing injuries from which it died:—Held: the nature of the accident, & the fact that the horse was known to shy, afforded evidence of negligence, & pltf. entitled to recover damages.—CAPE TOWN TOWN COUNCIL v. SOUTH AFRICAN BREWERIES (1912), C. P. D. 307.—S. AF.

z. Horse "resting"—Negligence.]—Pursuer averred that when driving a lorry along a street, seated with his legs over the near side, & when about to overtake a two-horse lorry of defts. proceeding in the same direction at a walking pace, he looked back over his shoulder on hearing the bell of a tram-car; that while in the act of doing so he was injured by his legs coming against defts.' lorry, which had suddenly stopped owing to one of its horses having come to a standstill, in accordance with a vicious habit of "resting" known to defts. He further averred that defts. were in fault in using such a horse in their business:—Held: pursuer had not stated a relevant case of fault against defts.—WATSON v. WORDIE & Co. (1906), 8 F. 876; 43 Sc. L. R. 644; 14 S. L. T. 98.—SCOT.

Sect. 2.—Liabilities: Sub-sect. 1, C.]

210. Collision—Plea of not guilty—Rejection of evidence.]—In trespass for running with a cart against pltf.'s chaise, deft. cannot give in evidence under not guilty that the cart & the chaise were travelling on the high road in opposite directions, & that the collision between them happened from the negligence of pltf. or from inevitable accident.—KNAPP v. SALSURY (1810), 2 Camp. 500.

*Annotation:—Consd. Boss v. Litton (1832), 5 C. & P. 407.

211. Horse out of control—Negligence—Absence of curb-chain.]—In trespass for an injury done to pltf.'s horse in consequence of deft.'s driving a gig against it, it was proved that deft. drove a high-spirited horse unskilfully & without a curb-chain. Deft. pleaded, (1) not guilty; (2) that his horse took fright & became ungovernable, in consequence of a cart being driven furiously against it, which was not supported by evidence. The judge was of opinion that deft. was liable, although he might not have been guilty of an act of negligence, or want of caution, as his plea of justification did not cover the whole case. The jury found a verdict for pltf. The ct. refused to grant a new trial, as there was ample evidence that the accident was caused by deft.'s negligence.

The doctrine, as applied to actions of this description, is that no man can be excused of a trespass, unless he can justify that the act complained of arose entirely without his default. If a person drive a young horse through the public streets of London, & does not use a curb-chain, although he may not anticipate that any injury may arise from his so doing, he is still culpable (DALLAS, C.J.).—WAKEMAN v. ROBINSON (1823), 1 Bing. 213; 8 Moore, C. P. 63; 1 L. J. O. S. C. P. 70; 130 E. R. 86.

212. Pony frightened by showman.]—In an action of trespass for injury done to a horse by a pony & chaise running against it, it was sworn on the part of deft. that his wife was holding the pony by the bridle, & a showman came by & frightened the pony, who ran off with the chaise:—Held: if true, this was a good defence on a plea of not guilty.—GOODMAN v. TAYLOR (1832), 5 C. & P. 410.

213. Horse slipping—Accident—Amendment of pleading.]—In an action on the case for an injury to pltf.'s omnibus by the negligent driving of deft.'s servant in deft.'s cart, it appeared that the injury was caused by the cart coming in contact with the omnibus, but the witnesses stated that the accident appeared to them to be caused by the slipping of deft.'s horse. Lord Abinger, C.B. proposing to nonsuit, leave was asked to amend by making the declaration conformable to the proofs:—Held: (1) a man was not liable for an accident of that kind at all, unless he knowingly kept a horse which it was dangerous to drive in the public streets, & of that there was, in that instance, no evidence; (2) if there were such evidence no amendment could be allowed, as it could support only a completely different cause of action; (3) pltf. must be nonsuited.—MORGAN v. SYMONDS (1837), 1 Jur. 137.

214. Injury to ass fettered on highway—Contributory negligence.]—The general rule of law respecting negligence is that although there may have been negligence on the part of pltf., yet, unless he might by the exercise of ordinary care have avoided the consequences of deft.'s negligence, he is entitled to recover.

Deft. negligently drove his horses & waggon against & killed an ass. The ass had been left in the highway fettered in the fore-feet, & was thus unable to get out of the way of deft.'s waggon, which was going at a smartish pace along the road:—Held: the jury were properly directed that, although it was an illegal act on the part of pltf. so to put the animal on the highway, pltf. was entitled to recover.—DAVIES (DAVIS) v. MANN (1842), 10 M. & W. 546; 12 L. J. Ex. 10; 7 J. P. 53; 6 Jur. 954; 152 E. R. 588.

control, came down a cross street. The horses, frightened by the barking of a dog, ran away. The driver was unable to hold them in, but told deft. to leave them to him. Deft. accordingly sat passive, while the driver, trying to turn the horses so as to prevent them from running into a shop window opposite, pulled them aside toward the spot where pltf. then happened to be, but on nearing her, endeavoured vainly to draw them away from her. They ran against her, & she being hurt, sued deft. for negligence & trespass. The jury found deft. free from negligence, & that the occurrence was a mere accident:—Held: he was not liable in trespass.—HOLMES v. MATHER (1875), L. R. 10 Exch. 261; 44 L. J. Ex. 176; 33 L. 217. Restive horse—Use of spur by rider—Negligence.—Deft. & his groom, both on horseback, the latter riding a "spirited" horse, were passing a waggon & horses driven by pltf., who was in his proper place at the head of the second horse. The groom, when opposite & in close proximity to pltf., put spurs to his horse in order to keep pace with his master, the horse struck out & kicked pltf. in the face & inflicted a severe injury. Pltf. having obtained a verdict against deft.:—Held: the use of the spurs by the groom was evidence of negligence for the jury, & the verdict must not be disturbed.—NORTH v. SMITH (1861), 10 C. B. N. S. 572; 4 L. T. 407; 142 E. R. 576.

218. Horse grazing—Kicking child—Natural propensity.—Deft.'s horse, being on a highway, kicked pltf., a child who was playing there. There was no evidence to show how the horse came to the spot, or what induced him to kick the child, or that he was accustomed to kick:—Held: this was no evidence from which a jury would be justified in inferring that deft. had been guilty of actionable negligence.

The owner of a horse must be taken to know that the animal will stray if not properly secured, & may find its way into his neighbour's corn or pasture. For a trespass of that kind, the owner is of course responsible. But if the horse does something which is quite contrary to his ordinary nature, something which his owner has no reason to expect he will do, he has the same sort of protection that the owner of a dog has; & everybody knows that it is not at all the ordinary habit of a horse to kick a child on a highway (WILLES, J.).—COX v. BURBIDGE (1863), 13 C. B. N. S. 430; 1 New Rep. 238; 32 L. J. C. P. 89; 9 Jur. N. S. 970; 11 W. R. 435; 143 E. R. 171.

218 i. Horse grazing—Kicking child.—Deft.'s horse being on the highway, a young boy approached to catch him by taking hold of a rope around his neck, when the boy was kicked. There was no evidence that deft. knew that the horse was accustomed to stray or had any vicious propensity, nor was the horse shown to have such fault, & there was evidence that the horse had been interfered with by several boys, of whom the injured boy was one:—Held: the boy & his father could not recover.—FLETT v. COULTER (1903), 23 C. L. T. Occ. N. 111; 5 O. L. R. 375; 1 O. W. R. 775 2 O. W. R. 142. —CAN.

221 i. Straying animals—Bull.—One of the oxen drawing a wagon on a public road was suddenly gored by a bull which had strayed on to the road:—Held: the mere fact that the driver of the wagon did not drive the bull from the road did not amount to contributory negligence, it being no part of his duty to do so.—HALL v. MASEA (1906), 23 S. C. 746; 16 C. T. R. 1115.—S. AF.

219. Dogs coupled together—Evidence of negligence.—Deft. exercised on a highway close to a town two greyhounds coupled together, it being nearly dark at the time. The dogs ran as fast as they could towards pltf., knocked him down & injured him. In arbn. proceedings:—Held: there was evidence of negligence upon which the arbitrator could properly find that deft. was liable in damages, although there was no evidence of scienter.—JONES v. OWEN (1871), 24 L. T. 587.

220. Kicking horse—Injury to passenger in omnibus—Evidence.—In an action against an omnibus proprietor for injury to a passenger, it was proved, on behalf of the latter, that he was sitting inside the omnibus & was injured by one of the horses kicking the front panel constituting the back of his seat, & that on a subsequent examination marks of other kicks were seen:—Held: there was evidence of negligence of defts. to go to the jury.—*SIMSON (SIMPSON) v. 221. Straying animals—Blind dog—Cycling accident.—Pltf., while cycling in a public street, was thrown down by coming into contact with deft.'s blind dog:—Held: the fact that deft. let the dog run in the street was no evidence of negligence.—MILLNS v. GARRATT (1906), Times, March 6.

222. — Fowls—Cycling accident—Proximate cause.—Pltf. was riding carefully a bicycle on a highway, upon the footpath of which were some fowls belonging to deft., who occupied premises on the side of the road opposite to the footpath. As pltf. got abreast of the fowls a dog belonging to a third party frightened the fowls, one of which flew into the spokes of the machine, causing it to upset, whereby pltf. suffered personal injury & the bicycle was damaged. Deft. knew the fowls were in the habit of straying on to the road:—Held: (1) even if the fowls were not lawfully on the highway, the damage which happened was not of such nature as was likely to result from their unlawful presence there, & such damage was too remote; (2) pltf. could not recover. Qu.: whether it is unlawful for the occupiers of land adjoining a highway to allow their poultry to stray upon the highway.

Cases in which pltf. was the owner of the soil on which the trespass was committed are not in point; for here the cyclist had no interest in the soil of the riding on motor bicycles, but there was no evidence that deft. was aware of this habit. Pltf.'s bicycle having been damaged:—Held: pltf. not entitled to recover damages from the owner of the dog.—ROBERTSON v. BOYCE (1912), A. D. 367.—S. AF.

222 i. — Turkey.—The owner of a turkeycock, which without negligence strays upon the highway contrary to a bye-law of the municipality, is not liable for damages resulting from a horse taking fright & running away at the sight of the bird acting as turkeycocks usually do.—*ZUMSTEIN v. 223. — Sow—Highway risk.]—A sow belonging to deft. strayed on the highway, & caused a horse to shy as it was passing a motor car belonging to pltf., with the result that a collision occurred & the motor car was damaged. The jury found that deft. was not guilty of negligence in allowing the sow to be on the road, that the probable result of the sow being on the road was that the horse would shy, & that they could not agree as to whether the driver of the car was guilty of contributory negligence:—Held: upon these findings deft. was entitled to judgment.—HIGGINS v. SEARLE (1909), 100 L. T. 280; 73 J. P. 185; 25 T. L. R. 301; 7 L. G. R. 640, C. A.

224. Horse—Defective fence—Remoteness of damage.]—A young horse, which deft. had placed in a field, escaped on to the highway owing to a defective hedge. Pltfs., who were riding a tandem bicycle along the highway, on seeing the horse, slowed down, but the horse turned round suddenly & ran across the road, coming into contact with the bicycle. The horse fell down, & then jumping up lashed out & injured the bicycle & one of pltfs. In an action by pltfs. claiming damages from deft., the ct. judge found that there was no evidence that the horse was vicious, or in the habit of trespassing or attacking bicycles or any one on the high road. He also found that deft. was guilty of negligence in turning the horse into a field of which the hedges were defective, but that as the act of the horse was not one which it was in the ordinary nature of a horse to commit, deft. was not liable:—Held: as the injury to pltfs. was not the natural consequence of deft.'s negligence, pltfs. were not entitled to recover.

The ct. judge was wrong in law in holding that deft. had been guilty of negligence in turning the horse into a field with defective hedges, inasmuch as

224 ii. — Mob turned loose on highway.]—If a man turns a mob of horses into a public road, & allows them to proceed along that road without proper control or guidance, he is guilty of negligence, especially where the road is in an inhabited district & is frequented by the public; & if, in consequence of this negligence, one of the public lawfully using the road sustains an injury, the person, through whose negligent conduct the horses doing such injury have been allowed to pass along the road, is prima facie responsible for such injury.—PAUL v. ROWE (1904), 24 N. Z. L. R. 641.—N.Z.

224 iii. — Dashing out of yard.]—While M. was riding a motor-cycle two quiet horses belonging to deft. dashed out from his yard, the gate of which was open, on to the road & collided with M., who was knocked off his cycle, & run over by a motor-car:—Held: as there was nothing that could have led anyone to believe that a horse not vicious but quiet would, if straying on a road, collide with a bicycle, deft. had incurred no liability.—MILLAR v. O'DOWD (1917), N. Z. L. R. 716.—N.Z.

225 i. — Cattle.]—A calf straying on the highway frightened a horse, causing him to shy & upset the vehicle to which he was harnessed:—Held: the owner of the calf liable for the damages thereby occasioned.—CHARENTE v. HUNEAULT (1910), Q. R. 39 S. C. 88.—CAN.

225 ii. — ]—Pltf.'s ox was injured by deft.'s oxen, which were on the highway in violation of a bye-law:—Held: without proof of scienter deft. not liable.—NAAS v. EISENHauer (1907), 41 N. S. R. 424; 3 E. L. R. 109.—CAN.

d. Animal driven through street negligently—Bull—Liability of vendee.]—After a bull had been sold to deft., but while the vendor was in charge of it on his way to deliver it to deft., it caused injury to pltf. There was negligent management of the bull, but the jury could not agree as to whether the animal was in charge of deft.'s servants:—Held: a new trial should be granted, as there was no finding as to whether at common law the owner or occupier of land adjoining a highway has no duty to keep his animals off the highway (BANKES, J.).—JONES v. LEE (1911), 106 L. T. 123; 76 J. P. 137; 28 T. L. R. 92; 56 Sol. Jo. 125.

225. Cattle — Open gate — Negligence.] Pltf. was riding on a bicycle at 10.30 p.m. along a highway adjoining a field, in which deft. kept a hundred cows. The field communicated by a gate with the highway, & at the time when pltf. was passing the gate was open & she saw some cows coming through it. A little further along were other cows which had come from the field, some of which threw pltf. down & injured her. At the trial no evidence was given as to by whom the gate had been opened. The ct. judge held in the circumstances the fact that deft.'s gate was open, & his cows had strayed on to the road through it & had caused the accident to pltf., afforded evidence of negligence, & it was for deft. to displace this evidence by showing that the gate was not left open by any negligence on his part or on that of his servants. Upon the evidence he held deft. had not displaced this prima facie case, & gave judgment for pltf.:—Held: there was no evidence upon which the ct. judge could find that deft. either by an act of his own or by neglect of a duty which he owed to the public produced an obstruction of the highway by his cattle, & judgment should be entered for deft.

A farmer is not entitled to turn out untended cattle on pasture adjoining a highway without a fence, to such a number that they are likely to obstruct the highway by day or night, without being liable to an action by those who using the highway are injured by the obstruction (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.).

There is at common law no obligation on the part of the owner or occupier of land, who depastures cattle near a highway, to provide any fences so as to prevent the cattle from getting into the highway (BUCKLEY, L.J.).—ELLIS v. BANYARD (1911), 106 L. T. 51; 28 T. L. R. 122; 56 Sol. Jo. 139, C. A.

the animal was in charge of deft.'s servants.—BUCKLEY v. FITZGERALD (1881), 15 I. L. T. Jo. 118.—IR.

e. — Becoming irritated.]—A bull was being led through the streets in a town, secured in the ordinary manner by a ring in its nose & a rope attached thereto, & by a halter upon its head. It was irritated by boys in the street, & struggled with the men in charge, so that the ring in its nose broke through a latent defect, & it escaped from the halter & injured a pedestrian on the street:—Held: the animal having been secured in a usual & reasonably safe manner neither the owner nor the carrier, in whose charge it was, was responsible.—HARPERS v. GREAT NORTH OF SCOTLAND Ry. Co. (1886), 13 R. 1139; 23 Sc. L. R. 814.—SCOT.

f. — Cow—Liable to get excited.]—Where the owner of a cow, which was being taken through the public streets in circumstances under which it might have been expected to become excited & furious, had not taken special precautions for the safety of the passers-by:—Held: he was liable in damages to a person who had been injured by the cow.—PHILLIPS v. NICOLL (1884), 11 R. 592; 21 Sc. L. R. 419.—SCOT.

where, either by a local Inclosure Act, or by prescription, or otherwise, a duty to fence is imposed) is not bound to fence so as to prevent harmless animals like sheep straying upon the highway.

While pltf.'s motor car was being driven along a highway in the daylight at the rate of sixteen to twenty miles an hour, the driver saw in front of him on the road a number of sheep untended; he put on his brakes & almost immediately thereafter two sheep, which had apparently been left behind by the others, jumped from the bank on the near side, & one of them ran in the front of the car & broke part of the steering gear, in consequence of which the driver lost control, & the car ran into the bank & was damaged. The sheep were the property of deft., who was subsequently prosecuted & fined under Highway Act, 1864 (c. 101), s. 25, for having allowed them to stray on the highway. In an action against deft. by pltf. in respect of the damage to the car, the ct. judge found (1) the sheep escaped on to the highway from deft.'s field owing to a defective hedge; (2) it was the natural tendency of sheep which were untended to run across or otherwise endanger vehicles in a road, & it was common knowledge that when sheep find themselves separated from the flock they have almost a mania for rejoining it, regardless of intervening traffic; (3) deft. had been guilty of negligence, or had committed a nuisance, in allowing sheep to stray on to the highway, & the accident was the natural consequence thereof: & he held deft. was liable. On appeal:—Held: (1) whether the action was sought to be based on negligence or on a nuisance to the highway, it was no breach of duty by deft. not to keep his sheep from straying on to the highway; (2) an animal like a sheep, by nature harmless, could not fairly be regarded as likely to collide with a motor car, & deft. could not be held liable on that footing; (3) (AVORY, J., in D. C.) the tendencies of sheep as found by the ct. judge were not a vicious or mischievous propensity within the decided cases.—HEATH'S GARAGE, LTD. v. HODGES, [1916] 2 K. B. 370; 85 L. J. K. B. 1289; 115 L. T. 129; 80 J. P. 321; 32 T. L. R. 570; 60 Sol. Jo. 554; 14 L. G. R. 911, C. A.

227. Sheep driven by night—Drover without light—Negligence.—There is no duty on the driver of a flock of sheep driven along the highway at night to carry a light, & the failure so to do is no evidence of negligence.—CATCHPOLE v. MINSTER (1913), 109 L. T. 953; 30 T. L. R. 111; 12 L. G. R. 280.

228. Cow with calf—Insufficient control—Negligence.—Deft. through an agent bought a cow & calf, & by deft.'s instructions the agent employed a drover to drive them to deft.'s farm. The drover got another man, who was about to drive bullocks in the same direction, to drive the cow & calf along with them. On the way the cow tossed a dog & afterwards tossed pltf., who suffered injury thereby. In an action for negligence there was evidence that a cow with a calf might become dangerous if it met a dog, & the judge found (1) that the drover was negligent as it was his duty to see that the cow was under control; (2) that deft. was negligent in employing one man to perform a dangerous operation for which his powers were inadequate; & (3) that even if the drover was an independent contractor this was not a defence; & the judge awarded pltf. damages:—Held: there was evidence to support the judge's findings of negligence, & he was entitled to hold that the drover was employed to do a dangerous thing on a highway, & therefore, even if the drover was an independent contractor, deft. was liable.—PINN v. REW (1916), 32 T. L. R. 451.

229. Cows driven at night—Licensed drover.—A widow sued, under Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (c. 93), for damages caused by the negligence of deft.'s servant. Pltf.'s late husband, while in a motor car at night-time, was thrown out & fatally injured upon the car colliding with a cow which, with one other, was under the charge of a licensed drover employed by deft. Deft. denied negligence, & alleged that the licensed drover was an independent contractor, for whom he was not liable. The jury returned a verdict for pltf.:—Held: (1) a drover of cattle was not necessarily an independent contractor because he had a licence; (2) in a place where a drover did not require a licence he was the servant of the employer, & not an independent contractor, & in such a case the employer was liable for the drover's negligence.—TURNBULL v. WIELAND (1916), 33 T. L. R. 143.

230. Colt driven without halter—Natural propensity.—A young unbroken colt belonging to deft., a farmer, was being taken along a highway on a dark night. It was allowed to go loose behind a mare which was being led & in front of a trap being driven by deft. Pltf., who was riding a bicycle, was coming from the opposite direction when the colt, being startled by the light on the bicycle, suddenly ran across the road & collided with & injured pltf. No warning was given by deft. to pltf. of the presence of the colt. In an action to recover damages the ct. judge found that it was well known, especially to a farmer, that a young unbroken colt when loose on the highway is apt, when startled, to rush about & kick, & that there is grave risk of danger to the public in allowing such a colt to go loose on the highway in the dark; & he held that deft. was guilty of negligence in allowing the colt to be on the highway in the dark without being under proper control, & in failing to give warning to pltf. of the presence of the colt:—Held: the ct. judge was right in so holding.—TURNER v. COATES, [1917] 1 K. B. 670; 86 L. J. K. B. 321; 115 L. T. 766; 33 T. L. R. 79.

g. Spectator entering stall at market—Contributory negligence.—Pltf., a butcher, desiring to examine a cow offered for sale by deft. at a public market, entered the stall where there was also a bull belonging to deft. The bull kicked pltf.:—Held: deft. not liable.—MARTIN v. HOGG (1907), 3 K. L. R. 209; Q. R. 31 S. C. 529.—CAN.

h. Passenger on railway platform—Bitten by dog.—Pltf. passing along the platform of defts.' railway station came into contact with a chain that he had not observed, & was immediately bitten by a dog. The dog was attached by the chain to a luggage barrow, which was being drawn by a porter in the employment of defts.:—Held: no question of scienter arose, & pltf. entitled to damages.—MAILLOU v. GREAT SOUTHERN

i. Servant in master's field—Bull.—A dairymaid was injured while removing cows from a field where there was also a bull belonging to defender, which attacked & trampled upon her:—Held: it was not proved that the bull was vicious, & the master not liable.—CLARK v. ARMSTRONG (1862), 24 D. 1315; 34 Sc. Jur. 640.—SCOT.

m. Gardener in public garden—Dog escaping from carrier's control.—A dog was delivered to a railway co. for carriage, the guard being told that it was a quiet animal. On being led to the train it at first went quietly, but soon showed a disposition to bite, & finally broke away from the porter who was leading it, & escaped from the station to a public garden at some distance, where it was secured by a gardener, whom it bit:—Held: there was no evidence of fault by the railway co., & in any case the injury was too remote.—GRAY v. N. B. RY. CO. (1890), 18 R. 76; 28 Sc. L. R. 81.—SCOT.

n. Animal in rented stall—by animal put in a joinin' stall without permission.—Pltf. rented a stall in a stable & put his horse into it. Deft. also rented a stall adjacent to pltf. Pltf. having put his horse into his stall, deft. came in with two horses, putting one into the stall he had rented, & the other without permission into a stall adjacent on the other side to that occupied by pltf.'s horse. Pltf.'s horse was badly injured by the latter horse:—Held: deft. was liable, not having had permission to occupy the stall.—BERUBE v. OUELLET (1881), 4 L. N. 343.—CAN.
